IN REMOVAL PROCEEDINGS

APPEAL

ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS: Violeta Delgado, Esquire

APPLICATION: Asylum; withholding of removal

This matter was last before the Board on May 29, 2015, when we dismissed the lead respondent's ¹ appeal from an Immigration Judge's decision denying her application for asylum and withholding of removal under sections 208 and 241(b)(3) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, 8 U.S.C. §§ 1158, 1231(b)(3). ² On July 3, 2018, the United States Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit remanded proceedings for the Board to consider in the first instance whether "Guatemalan women" constitutes a particular social group. ³

To establish that a group defined as "Guatemalan women" is cognizable under the asylum and withholding of removal statutes, the respondent must prove that the group is: "(1) composed of members who share a common immutable characteristic, (2) defined with particularity, and (3) socially distinct within [Guatemalan] society" Matter of A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. 316, 319 (A.G. 2018) (quoting Matter of M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. 227, 237 (BIA 2014)); see also Matter of W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. 208, 212-18 (BIA 2014), aff'd in pertinent part and vacated and remanded in part on other grounds sub nom. by Reyes v. Lynch, 842 F.3d 1125 (9th Cir. 2016), cert. denied sub nom. Reyes v. Sessions, 138 S. Ct. 736 (2018).

We agree with the respondent's position on remand⁴ that being a woman is an immutable characteristic (Respondent's Br. at 2, 4), as gender is fundamental to one's individual identity or conscience. See Matter of A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 316, 318. However, we are unable to determine

¹ The lead respondent's son is a derivative of her asylum application. Hereafter, references to "the respondent" will refer to the lead respondent.

² The respondent did not challenge on appeal the denial of her request for protection under the Convention Against Torture and it is not implicated in the Ninth Circuit's remand.

from the record before us whether the social group of “Guatemalan women” satisfies the foregoing “particularity” and “social distinction” requirements. As the requirements of particularity and social distinction involve fact-finding that we cannot do in the first instance, remand to the Immigration Judge is necessary. See 8 C.F.R. § 1003.1(d)(3)(iv); Matter of D-I-M-, 24 I&N Dec. 448, 451 (BIA 2008); see also Matter of A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 340-41 (emphasizing the importance of Immigration Judges as fact-finders). In evaluating the particularity and social distinction of the claimed group of “Guatemalan women,” the Immigration Judge should consider the Ninth Circuit’s decision in Perdomo v. Holder 611 F.3d 662, 669 (9th Cir. 2010), and its rejection of the “notion that a persecuted group may simply represent too large a portion of a population to allow its members to qualify for asylum.” See also Mohammed v. Gonzales, 400 F.3d 785, 797 (9th Cir. 2005) (“[T]he recognition that girls or women of a particular clan or nationality[,] or even in some circumstances females in general[,] may constitute a social group is simply a logical application of our law.”) (internal parentheses omitted); accord Ticas-Guillen v. Whitaker, 744 F. App’x 410 (9th Cir. Nov. 30, 2018).

Remand will allow the Immigration Judge to conduct additional fact-finding that may be necessary for the required “evidence-based inquiry” as to whether the social group of “Guatemalan women” meets the requirements of particularity and whether that group is perceived as “distinct” in Guatemalan society. See Matter of M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 241-44; Matter of W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 221; Pirir-Boc v. Holder, 750 F.3d 1077, 1084 (9th Cir. 2014). If the social group is found to be cognizable under the Act, the Immigration Judge should consider whether the respondent has demonstrated a nexus between the social group of “Guatemalan women” and the past harm she suffered or future harm she fears. Additionally, per the Ninth Circuit’s order, the Immigration Judge should reevaluate whether the respondent’s failure to report her abuse to the Guatemalan police precludes her from showing that the Guatemalan government is unwilling or unable to protect her. See Bringas-Rodriguez v. Sessions, 850 F.3d 1051, 1069-70 (9th Cir. 2017) (en banc); see also Matter of A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 337-38 (an applicant seeking to establish persecution based on violent conduct of a private actor must show the government condoned the private actions or demonstrated an inability to protect the victims). We express no opinion regarding the ultimate outcome of the respondent’s case.

ORDER: The record is remanded for further proceedings consistent with this decision.

FINAL DECISION AND ORDER OF THE IMMIGRATION JUDGE

I. Procedural History

Respondent is a 20-year-old native and citizen of Guatemala who entered the United States as an unaccompanied minor on June 1, 2014. Exh. 1. The Department of Homeland Security (“DHS”) initiated removal proceedings against Respondent on June 5, 2014, through personal service of a Notice to Appear (“NTA”). Id. The NTA alleges that: (1) Respondent is not a citizen or national of the United States; (2) she is a native and citizen of Guatemala; (3) she arrived in the United States at or near Hidalgo, Texas, on or about June 1, 2014; and (4) she was not then admitted or paroled after inspection by an Immigration Officer. Id. Based on these factual allegations, the NTA charges Respondent as removable pursuant to section 212(a)(6)(A)(i) of the Act. Id.

At a Master Calendar Hearing on May 28, 2015, Respondent, through counsel, admitted the factual allegations in the NTA and conceded the charge of removability. She declined to designate a country of removal and, based on DHS’s recommendation, the Court designated Guatemala. Based on her status as an unaccompanied minor, Respondent filed a Form I-589, Application for Asylum and Withholding with the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (“USCIS”) on July 29, 2015. Exh. 2, Tab 1. She subsequently filed that application with the Court on October 7, 2016, after USCIS determined that she was ineligible for asylum. Exh. 3, Tab 5. Respondent testified in support of her application at an individual hearing on March 13, 2019.

III. Issues Presented

The key issues before the Court are: (1) whether Respondent demonstrated past persecution or a well-founded fear of future persecution; (2) whether, under the particular facts of Respondent's case, "Guatemalan women" is a cognizable particular social group; and (3) whether Respondent demonstrated a nexus between her past persecution and/or well-founded fear of future persecution and particular social group.

IV. Testimonial Evidence

Respondent was born and raised in [REDACTED]¹, Guatemala in the Department of [REDACTED]. She lived with her grandmother and great grandmother starting at the age of nine after her mother and father moved to the United States to work. In June 2014, when Respondent left Guatemala, her grandmother was fifty-nine years old and her great grandmother was seventy-nine years old.

Respondent came to the United States in June 2014, because she feared for her life in Guatemala. One night in April 2014, Respondent was walking home from her friend's house around 10:00 p.m. when an unknown man approached her from behind and tried to kidnap her. He grabbed her arm, took her to a dark area without street lights, and threatened to harm Respondent if she screamed or called for help. Respondent was crying and afraid and struggled to escape from the man's grasp. Eventually, Respondent kicked the man in the genitals, which gave her an opportunity to escape and run away.

¹ The Court takes administrative notice of the population of [REDACTED] which sits at approximately 47,000 and is comprised of about thirteen localities within that municipality.

Respondent ran the short distance back home, at which point she told her grandmother what had happened. Respondent's grandmother went outside with a stick to look for the man, but she did not see anyone in the area. Although it was dark, Respondent was able to see that the man who attacked her had a tattoo of the Virgin Mary. Later that night, Respondent's grandmother called Respondent's parents and told them what had happened. Everyone agreed that Respondent needed to leave Guatemala as soon as possible. Respondent left for the United States two weeks later.

During those two weeks, Respondent never left the house alone. She continued attending school, but her grandmother brought her to school and her brother-in-law picked her up at the end of the day. One day, a group of men started gathering on a corner near her house. The men wore long pants, were shirtless, and some had tattoos on their chests. The men whistled at Respondent and made fun of her when she passed. Respondent did not recognize the men and does not know why they showed an interest in her.

Before leaving Guatemala, Respondent talked to her older sister about her problems with men. Her sister advised her that the best course of action would be for her to leave Guatemala. Respondent does not know if her sister ever experienced similar problems with men because she never talked about it. Respondent also does not know if any of her female classmates in school were targeted by men because she never discussed this topic with them.

Respondent never reported her attack to the police because the police do not protect anyone in Guatemala, much less women. For example, ten years ago, Respondent's aunt was killed and it took the police several hours to begin investigating the crime after it happened. The police investigated for only short while and never arrested anyone for her aunt's murder. In addition, in 2013, Respondent and her aunt and cousin were robbed on a bus in Guatemala City. The man grabbed Respondent's aunt by the neck, pointed a knife at her, and stole all of her personal belongings. No one on the bus intervened or called the police.

Respondent did not move to another area of Guatemala instead of coming to the United States because all of her family lives in either the United States or [REDACTED]. Respondent's sister and brother-in-law live in Sutun, a rural village about twenty minutes' walk from Respondent's home in [REDACTED]. She could not move in with her sister because she lives with her in-laws and the house is very small. In addition to her sister, Respondent also has three aunts and other extended family in Guatemala. She is not very close with her aunts and other extended family, so she could not live with any of them if she returned to Guatemala.

If Respondent returns to Guatemala, she is afraid that the gangs would rape, kidnap, or kill her. Violence against women in Guatemala has increased in recent years, which makes it especially difficult for Respondent to live safely in Guatemala. Four months ago, a woman was found raped and killed in [REDACTED]. Respondent is afraid that the same will happen to her, and she wants to stay in the United States because she feels safe here.

V. Documentary Evidence

Respondent provided an affidavit and supplemental affidavit about her past experiences in Guatemala. See Exhs. 3, Tab 6; 4, Tab 9. She also provided a psychological evaluation conducted by Dr. Daniel Schwarz and ample country conditions evidence about the mistreatment of females in Guatemala. See Exhs. 2, Tabs 2-4; 4, Tabs 10-11; 5, Tabs A-F; 6. The Court has reviewed all of these documents, but does not summarize the contents of the documents herein.

VI. Statement of the Law and Legal Analysis

A. Credibility and Corroboration

In considering Respondent's application, the Court must make a threshold determination of her credibility. INA §§ 208(b)(1)(B)(iii), 241(b)(3)(C) (2012). See Matter of O-D-, 21 I&N Dec. 1079 (BIA 1998); Matter of Vigil, 19 I&N Dec. 572 (BIA 1988); Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. 467 (BIA 1987). The statutory amendments of the REAL ID Act, P.L. 109-13, 119 Stat. 231 (2005), apply in this case because Respondent's asylum application was made after May 11, 2005. See Matter of S-B-, 24 I&N Dec. 42 (BIA 2006).

The REAL ID Act under INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii) provides:

Considering the totality of the circumstances, and all relevant factors, a trier of fact may base a credibility determination on the demeanor, candor, or responsiveness of the applicant or witness, the inherent plausibility of the applicant's or witness's account, the consistency between the applicant's or witness's written and oral statements (whenever made and whether or not under oath, and considering the circumstances under which the statements were made), the internal consistency of each statement, the consistency of such statements with other evidence of the record (including the reports of the Department of State on country conditions), and any inaccuracies or falsehoods in such statements, without regard to whether an inconsistency, inaccuracy, or falsehood goes to the heart of the applicant's claim, or any other relevant factor. There is no presumption of credibility, however, if no adverse credibility determination is explicitly made, the applicant or witness shall have a rebuttable presumption of credibility on appeal.

The testimony of an applicant may, in some cases, be the only evidence available, and it can suffice where the testimony is believable, consistent, and sufficiently detailed, in light of general conditions in the home country, to provide a plausible and coherent account of the basis for the alleged fear. Matter of Dass, 20 I&N Dec. 120, 124 (BIA 1989); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.16(b) (2012). An overall credibility determination "does not necessarily rise or fall on each element of the witness's testimony, but rather is more properly decided on the cumulative effect of the entirety of all such elements." Jishiashvili v. Att'y Gen., 402 F.3d 386, 396 (3d Cir. 2005). An applicant may be given the "benefit of the doubt" if there is some ambiguity regarding an aspect of her asylum claim. See Matter of Y-B-, 21 I&N Dec. 1136, 1139 (BIA 1998). In some cases, an applicant may be found to be credible even if he has trouble remembering specific facts. See, e.g., Matter of B-, 21 I&N Dec. 66, 70–71 (BIA 1995) (finding that an alien who has fled persecution may have trouble remembering exact dates when testifying, and such failure to provide precise dates may not be an indication of deception).

Where an alien's claim relies primarily on personal experiences not reasonably subject to verification, corroborating documentary evidence of the alien's particular experience is not essential. See Matter of S-M-J-, 21 I&N Dec. 722, 725 (BIA 1997). The body of evidence, including testimony, must be considered in its totality. Id. at 729. Where it is reasonable, however, to expect such corroborating evidence for certain alleged facts pertaining to the specifics of the claim, the alien should provide such evidence or explain why it was not provided. Id. See also Matter of M-D-, 21 I&N Dec. 1180 (BIA 1998). When an alien's testimony is weak or lacking in specific details, there is an even greater need for corroborative evidence. Y-B-, 21 I&N Dec. at 1139. When the Court requires corroborative evidence it must (1) identify the facts for which it is reasonable to expect corroboration, (2) inquire as to whether the applicant had provided information corroborating those facts, and, if not, (3) analyze whether the applicant had adequately explained her failure to do so. Abdulai v. Ashcroft, 239 F.3d 542, 554 (3d Cir. 2001). It is improper for an Immigration Judge to deny an alien notice and an opportunity to produce corroboration of her claims or an opportunity to explain her failure if he could not do so. Saravia v. Att'y Gen., 905 F.3d 729, 738 (3d Cir. 2018).

Having reviewed the record in its entirety, the Court finds Respondent credible. Respondent testified candidly about her past mistreatment in Guatemala, her demeanor was forthright, and she answered all questions posed by her attorney, DHS, and the Court. Respondent testified consistently with her affidavit and supplemental affidavit, as well as with the information she provided during her psychological evaluation. See Exhs. 3, Tab 6; 4, Tab 9; 5, Tab A. Additionally, her testimony is plausible in light of the country conditions evidence in the record, which details the pervasive violence facing women in Guatemala. See Exhs. 2, Tabs 2-4; 4, Tabs 10-11; 5, Tabs B-F; 6.

The Court also finds that Respondent adequately corroborated her claim. Respondent provided her psychological evaluation conducted by Dr. Daniel Schwarz, who confirms that Respondent exhibits symptoms consistent with the trauma she states she experienced. See Exh. 5, Tab A. In addition, the country conditions evidence in the record corroborates the fact that violence against women, including domestic violence, rape, and femicide, is widespread in Guatemala, thus lending support to Respondent's claimed instances of harm. See Exhs. 2, Tabs 2-4; 4, Tabs 10-11; 5, Tabs B-F; 6. Though Respondent provided sparse documentary evidence, this evidence is sufficient to corroborate her claim in conjunction with her credible, plausible, and detailed testimony. In addition, given that Respondent's claim is based on her own personal experiences, it is not reasonable to expect additional corroborating evidence of her claim, with the exception of perhaps a few statements of support from members of her family.

DHS ultimately did not raise any issues with Respondent's credibility or the corroboration of her claim. For this reason, and those noted above, the Court finds that Respondent is credible and that she adequately corroborated her claim. INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii).

B. Asylum

In an asylum adjudication, the applicant bears the burden of establishing statutory eligibility for relief. See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(a); see also S-M-J, 21 I&N Dec. at 722; Matter of Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. 211, 215 (BIA 1985), modified on other grounds by Matter of Mogharrabi, 19 I&N Dec. 439, 446 (BIA 1987). To establish this eligibility, the applicant must demonstrate that she meets the definition of a refugee as defined in INA § 101(a)(42). INA § 208(b)(1)(A); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(a). Thus, the applicant must show that she either suffered past persecution or has a well-founded fear of persecution, and that this persecution is on account of the applicant's race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. INA § 101(a)(42)(A). If eligibility is established, asylum may be granted in the exercise of discretion. INA § 208(b)(1)(A); INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421 (1987). Regardless, however, asylum may not be granted to any alien who falls under the exceptions of INA §§ 208(a)(2) and (b)(2).

Respondent claims that she experienced past persecution and has a well-founded fear of future persecution on account of her membership in the particular social groups, “Guatemalan women” and “Guatemalan women living in households without male relatives.” Exh. 5A. For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds that Respondent has demonstrated a well-founded fear of persecution on account of a cognizable particular social group.

1. Timeliness of Application

As a threshold issue, an applicant must affirmatively prove by clear and convincing evidence that she filed her asylum application within one year of the date of her last arrival into the United States or April 1, 1997, whichever is later. INA § 208(a)(2)(B); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.4(a)(2). If the applicant filed after the one-year deadline, she must show, to the satisfaction of the Court that she qualifies for an exception to the filing deadline. Id. To qualify for an exception to the filing deadline, the applicant must demonstrate the existence of either (1) changed circumstances that materially affect her eligibility for asylum, or (2) extraordinary circumstances relating to the delay in filing an application within the filing time period. INA § 208(a)(2)(D); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.4(a)(4)-(5).

Respondent has not shown by clear and convincing evidence that she filed her asylum application within one year of her arrival. See INA § 208(a)(2)(B), (D). Respondent entered the United States on June 1, 2014, and filed her asylum application with USCIS on July 29, 2015 See Exhs. 1; 2, Tabs A. This is more than one year after Respondent's arrival in the United States, making her application untimely. However, Respondent argues, and DHS concedes, that extraordinary circumstances excuse her untimely filing because of a legal disability, i.e., her status as an unaccompanied minor at the time of entry. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.4(a)(5)(ii).² The Board of Immigration Appeals (“BIA” or the “Board”) has conclusively determined that “the meaning of ‘minor’ in the context of a ‘[l]egal disability’ . . . is a person less than eighteen years old.” See

² Even though the one-year filing deadline is inapplicable to unaccompanied alien children, Respondent does not, nor has she ever, qualified as an unaccompanied alien child as statutorily defined in 6 U.S.C. § 279(g)(2)(C) because her parents are in the United States. See 6 U.S.C. § 279(g)(2)(C). Therefore, the one-year filing deadline applies in this case.

Anna Dai, A200 753 526 (BIA May 26, 2017). Respondent entered the United States when she was fifteen years old and filed her asylum application one year and one month later, when she was sixteen years old. See Exhs. 1; 2, Tab A. Given the young age at which Respondent entered the United States and filed her application, the Court agrees that extraordinary circumstances excuse her untimely filing. As such, the Court will consider her eligibility for asylum under INA § 101(a)(42).

2. Past Persecution

Respondent has not met her burden of proving that she merits asylum on the basis of past persecution. Persecution is “a threat to the life or freedom of, or the infliction of suffering or harm upon, those who differ in a way regarded as offensive.” Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 222; Li v. Att’y Gen., 400 F.3d 157, 164–68 (3d Cir. 2005). Persecution “encompasses a variety of forms of adverse treatment, including non-life threatening violence and physical abuse or non-physical forms of harm.” Matter of O-Z- & I-Z-, 22 I&N Dec. 23, 25–26 (BIA 1998). It does not include “all treatment that our society regards as unfair, unjust or even unlawful or unconstitutional.” Fatin v. INS, 12 F.3d 1233, 1240 (3d Cir. 1993). In addition, “[g]enerally harsh conditions shared by many other persons” have not been found to amount to persecution. Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 222; see also Matter of Sanchez and Escobar, 19 I&N Dec. 276 (BIA 1985) (finding that harm resulting from country-wide civil strife is not persecution on account of one of the five enumerated grounds). An isolated incident of physical abuse does not rise to the level of persecution. Voci v. Gonzales, 409 F.3d 607, 615 (3d Cir. 2005). However, multiple beatings combined with other harassment may constitute persecution. Id. at 614–15 (citing O-Z- & I-Z-, 22 I&N Dec. at 26 (holding that incidents of harm suffered by the alien may, in the aggregate, rise to the level of persecution)). Torture is harm sufficiently severe to constitute persecution. See Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 222; Li, 400 F.3d at 164–68.

Respondent experienced two discrete instances of mistreatment in Guatemala, neither of which, individually or cumulatively, rise to the level of past persecution. In April 2014, Respondent was accosted on the street by an unknown man whom Respondent believed intended to rape her. See Exh. 4, Tab 9. Then, later that same month, a group of men started catcalling Respondent on her way to and from school. See id. These incidents were certainly frightening for Respondent given that she was a young girl at the time. However, Respondent did not suffer any physical harm from either of these two incidents, or at any point during her fifteen-year residence in Guatemala. In fact, the incident where Respondent was accosted lasted very briefly and ended before the perpetrator had the chance to physically or sexually abuse Respondent. Therefore, given that Respondent experienced two isolated incidents of mistreatment without any concomitant physical harm, the Court does not find that Respondent experienced past persecution in Guatemala under the Third Circuit Court of Appeals’ (“Third Circuit”) stringent standard. See Kibinda v. Att’y Gen., 477 F.3d 113, 120 (3d Cir. 2007) (holding that a five-day detention and beating that required stitches and left a scar were not “severe enough to constitute persecution under our stringent standard”).

The Court recognizes that Respondent was a minor at the time of her past mistreatment in Guatemala. Several circuit courts have recognized that age can be a critical factor in determining whether the harm an individual suffered constitutes past persecution. See Hernandez-Ortiz v.

Gonzales, 496 F.3d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 2007); Jorge-Tzoc v. Gonzalez, 435 F.3d 146, 150 (2d Cir. 2006); Liu v. Ashcroft, 380 F.3d 307, 314 (7th Cir. 2004); Abay v. Ashcroft, 368 F.3d 634, 640 (6th Cir. 2004). This is because the harm a child fears or has suffered may be relatively less than that of an adult and still constitute persecution. Liu, 380 F.3d at 314. Even under this heightened standard, the Court does not find that Respondent experienced past persecution in Guatemala. Respondent's psychological evaluation states that she meets the diagnostic criteria for Upbringing Away from Parents and Acculturation Difficulty, both of which stem from her upbringing and environment in Guatemala and the United States. Exh. 5, Tab A. The Court is sympathetic to the difficulties Respondent experienced as a child growing up without her parents and in her transition to the United States. Nonetheless, without evidence of some type of physical harm or lasting psychological trauma, the Court cannot find that Respondent's past experiences constitute harm rising to the level of past persecution, even when viewing those experiences through the lens of a minor.

3. Well-Founded Fear of Future Persecution

If an applicant has not demonstrated past persecution, she may still establish that she has an independent well-founded fear of future persecution on account of a statutory ground committed by the government or by forces that the government is unable or unwilling to control. See Gao v. Ashcroft, 299 F.3d 266, 272 (3d Cir. 2002). An asylum applicant may demonstrate an independent well-founded fear of future persecution by showing that she has a genuine fear, and that a reasonable person in her circumstances would fear persecution if returned to her country of origin. Id. at 272. An applicant satisfies the subjective prong of this test by testifying credibly regarding her fear. Lie v. Ashcroft, 396 F.3d 530, 536 (3d Cir. 2005). An applicant satisfies the objective prong of this test by demonstrating that she would be individually singled out for persecution or by demonstrating that "there is a pattern or practice in his or her country of nationality . . . of persecution of a group of persons similarly situated to the applicant on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion . . ." 8 C.F.R. § 208.13(b)(2)(iii)(A); see also Lie, 396 F.3d at 536. Significantly, an applicant cannot have a well-founded fear of future persecution if she could avoid persecution by relocating to another part of her country of origin, if under all circumstances it would be reasonable to expect the applicant to do so. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(2)(ii).

a. Persecution

Respondent has not demonstrated that she suffered past persecution. As such, she is not entitled to a rebuttable presumption that she has a well-founded fear of future persecution. Respondent satisfies the subjective prong of the well-founded fear test because she credibly testified regarding her fear of harm in Guatemala. For the reasons discussed below, Respondent also satisfies the objective prong of the well-founded fear test given the pattern and practice of violence against women in Guatemala.

i. Objectively Reasonable Fear

Respondent has met her burden of proving that she merits asylum on the basis of an objectively reasonable well-founded fear of future persecution. To demonstrate an objectively reasonable fear, there must be a “reasonable possibility,” but not a certainty, that the applicant will suffer persecution. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. at 430; 8 C.F.R. §1208.13(b)(2). “Reasonable” means a one-in-ten chance of suffering persecution, not a ninety or fifty percent chance of suffering persecution. See Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. at 421; 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(2). Therefore, to support a claim based on a well-founded fear of future persecution, the applicant must “provide some objective, credible evidence, direct or circumstantial, that her fear is reasonable” and demonstrate an objectively reasonable possibility of persecution. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. at 421; Zubeda v. Ashcroft, 333 F.3d 463, 476 (3d Cir. 2003).

Although Respondent cannot demonstrate that she would be singled out for persecution upon her return to Guatemala, the Court finds that her fear of future persecution is objectively reasonable given the pattern and practice of violence against women in Guatemala as documented by the country conditions evidence in the record. See Lie, 396 F.3d at 537 (explaining that pattern and practice requires proof of persecution that is “systemic, pervasive, or organized”). Persistent stereotypes and biases regarding the status of women in Guatemala has contributed to a society in which women face brutal forms of violence because of their gender. Exh. 4, Tab 11. Such violence takes on many forms, such as “life-threatening and degrading” forms of domestic violence, sexual assault, and rape, and is carried out by various actors within Guatemalan society, such as romantic partners, criminal groups, and the police. Exh. 2, Tab 3. Documented cases of domestic violence have involved rape and physical beatings with baseball bats and other weapons. Id., Tab 2. Much of the violence against women is carried out in the home or by armed criminal groups that exert complete control over the communities in which women live. Id. The gangs, for example, use violence against women as a way to initiate new male members and as a way to punish women for refusing to join the gang. Id. Women who refuse to join a gang are threatened, raped, tortured, and killed. Id. Consequently, in order to avoid physical harm by the gangs, women routinely barricade themselves and their children inside their home, which requires them to give up school and work and go into hiding. Id. While this tactic may offer protection from criminal groups, it does not, as noted by the country conditions, offer a solution for those women who experience violence from “criminal armed groups alongside repeated physical and sexual violence at home,” as is common in Guatemala. Id.

The high rate of crime against women illustrates that violence against women is a serious, growing, and pervasive problem in Guatemala that spans all demographics of women. Forty-five percent of Guatemalan women have suffered from some form of violence in their lifetimes, and many more have witnessed violence against female relatives. Exh. 5, Tab F. Guatemala has the third highest rate of femicide in the world, with the majority of those killings also involving sexual assault, torture, and mutilation. Exh. 4, Tab 11. 748 women were murdered in 2013, which equates to an average of two murders of women per day. Id. In addition, the Public Ministry reported 11,449 cases of sexual or physical assault against women in 2015, and 29,128 complaints of domestic violence in only the first eight months of 2015. Exh. 5, Tab C. Furthermore, as of September 8, the PNC reported at least forty-eight investigations against PNC officials for violence and discrimination against women. Unmarked Exh. 7 at 17. In light of such violence against women, the Guatemalan government established a 24-hour court in Guatemala City to offer services related to violence against women, including sexual assault, exploitation, and trafficking of women and girls. Id. at 16. The judiciary also created special courts in certain departments to handle cases involving violence against women, and Guatemala’s Public Ministry established a special prosecutor for femicide. Id. It is reasonable to infer that the existence of these tools for addressing the unique problem of violence against women is a reflection of the pervasiveness of that societal problem in Guatemala. Despite these initiatives, however, the PNC often fails to respond to requests for assistance related to domestic violence, and the government fails to enforce the laws against femicide, rape, and domestic abuse effectively, leading to pervasive impunity for violence against women. Id.

The foregoing evidence reflects the pervasiveness of the danger facing women in Guatemala. Such danger ranges from single incidents which constitute persecution, such as rape, Matter of D-V-, 21 I&N Dec. 77 (BIA 1993), and violent assaults Voci, 409 F.3d at 607; Stanojkova v. Holder, 645 F.3d 943, to the accrual of incidents over time where the aggregate harm rises to the severity of persecution. O-Z- & I-Z-, 22 I&N Dec. at 26. In these circumstances, the fact of pervasive or systemic persecution of women in Guatemala constitutes a well-founded fear of persecution. The documentation in the record paints a stark picture of Guatemala, far from the glossy brochures for ecotourism. DHS has chosen to rely on the argument that Respondent has not met her burden of proof in establishing statutory eligibility for asylum, either because she failed present a cognizable social group, a nexus to a protected ground, conduct the government is unable or unwilling to control, or an inability to internally relocate. What DHS has not done, however, is provide the Court with a counter factual narrative of the conditions in Guatemala. DHS has not presented any evidence to refute the depiction of Guatemala as a country rife with danger for women merely because they are women, thus constraining the evidence the Court is able to consider.

Respondent's personal experiences align with the reality facing thousands of women in Guatemala. As she got older, Respondent noticed that she was attracting the attention of unknown men on the street, whom she believed belonged to a gang or other criminal group. Exh. 4, Tab 9. Respondent was watched and street harassed by groups of men and on one occasion, was accosted by an unknown man who had tattoos. Id. Respondent believed that the man intended to rape her, perhaps with the help of some of his fellow gang members, and struggled to escape from the man's grasp. Id. Respondent eventually escaped from the man, ran home, and, that night, made arrangements with her parents to leave Guatemala. Id. Growing up, Respondent knew of several women in her community who had disappeared or been murdered, causing Respondent to live in fear that the same would happen to her. More recently, Respondent learned from her sister that a woman's body was found raped and beaten on the street in their hometown of Cubulco, thus showing that even a small town like Cubulco has its share of brutal violence. Respondent testified that she does not trust the police to protect her given that her aunt's murder is still unsolved today, ten years after it happened, due in large part to police inaction and disinterest. From all of this evidence, it is clear that there is a pervasive and indiscriminate practice of harming women in Guatemala on the basis of their gender, and that such practices are able to persist due to police and government indifference towards gender-based violence. As such, the Court finds that Respondent has met her burden in proving there is at least a one in ten chance that she—as a female—would be harmed if she returned to Guatemala.

ii. Internal Relocation

Respondent must also demonstrate that she could not avoid persecution by relocating within Guatemala. In Matter of A-B-, the Attorney General reiterated that Immigration Judges must determine, consistent with the regulations, whether internal relocation in the alien's home country presents a reasonable alternative before granting asylum. 27 I&N Dec. 316 (A.G. 2018). Applying this rule in the context of an asylum claim based on private criminal activity, the Attorney General reasoned that "when the applicant has suffered personal harm at the hands of only a few specific individuals, internal relocation would seem more reasonable than if the applicant were persecuted, broadly, by her country's government." Id. at 345. This statement fails to address this Court's obligation to consider the reasonableness of internal relocation in light of several factors, including, but not limited to, "other serious harm in the place of suggested relocation; any ongoing civil strife within the country; administrative, economic, or judicial infrastructure; geographical limitations; and social and cultural constraints, such as age, gender, health, and social and familial ties." 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(3). Thus, even though Respondent suffered past harm at the hands of "only a few specific individuals," the Court will adhere to its obligation to analyze her ability to relocate in light of the regulatory factors noted in 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(3).

Under the regulatory framework, the Court finds that Respondent could not avoid persecution by relocating within Guatemala due to the pattern and practice of violence against women throughout Guatemala. As noted above, women face staggering rates of violence in the form of domestic violence, sexual assault, rape, and femicide by various actors throughout Guatemala, which necessarily eliminates the possibility of internal relocation to avoid harm. See Exh. 4, Tab 11. In addition, social and cultural constraints make internal relocation unreasonable in Respondent's case. Respondent's parents live in the United States and, aside from a few distant relatives, she has little familial ties outside of her hometown of Cubulco. Moreover, Respondent testified that she lived in Cubulco for her entire life and rarely traveled to other areas of Guatemala. Given Respondent's lack of social and family ties, it is unreasonable to expect Respondent, a young girl of twenty years old, to relocate to another area of Guatemala on her own. As such, internal relocation is not a viable option, and Respondent has met her burden in establishing a well-founded fear of future persecution.

b. Membership in a Particular Social Group

Respondent must also establish that her future persecution would be inflicted on account of her membership in a particular social group. A particular social group is defined as a group of individuals who share a common, immutable characteristic that cannot be changed or that they should not be required to change because it is fundamental to their individual identities or consciences. Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 211; Fatin, 12 F.3d at 1233. Immutable characteristics include innate characteristics such as "sex, color, or kinship ties" or shared past experiences. Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 233. Although past experience is an immutable characteristic, a social group "must exist independently of the persecution suffered" and "must have existed before the persecution began." Lukwago v. Ashcroft, 329 F.3d 157, 172 (3d Cir. 2003).

Additionally, the Board has held that a social group must be defined with particularity. Matter of W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. 208, 214 (BIA 2014); Matter of A-M-E- & J-G-U-, 24 I&N Dec. 69, 76 (BIA 2007). Particularity entails that the group have “discrete and definable boundaries” and not be too broad or amorphous. See Matter of M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. 227, 239 (BIA 2014). Further, a social group must be “socially distinct” within the society in question such that people with shared, immutable characteristics are recognized or perceived as a particular group. W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 212–13; M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 237 (citing Matter of C-A-, 23 I&N Dec. 951, 956–57 (BIA 2014)). Notably, a group’s limiting characteristics or boundaries must exist independently of persecution, and social distinction may not be determined solely by the perception of an applicant’s persecutors. W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 218. However, persecutors’ perceptions may be relevant because it is indicative of whether society views a group as distinct and in cases involving imputed grounds, where one may mistakenly be believed to belong to a particular social group. M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 243 (citations omitted).

The Board has repeatedly held that the determination of whether a particular social group is cognizable is a fact-based inquiry that must be made on a case-by-case basis. See Matter of W-Y-C & H-O-B-, 27 I&N Dec. 189 (BIA 2018); M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 243; W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 218. The Circuit Courts of Appeals have similarly held that factual findings underlie the analysis of a group’s cognizability, particularly social distinction. See e.g., Hernandez-De La Cruz v. Lynch, 819 F.3d 784, 787 (5th Cir. 2016); Sanchez-Robles v. Lynch, 808 F.3d 688, 691 (6th Cir. 2015). Recently, the Attorney General in A-B- adhered to the fact-based inquiry for particular social groups by reinforcing that respondents must articulate the exact delineation of any proposed social group on the record so that the immigration judge can engage in the necessary factual and legal findings. 27 I&N Dec. at 344.

As her primary claim, Respondent asserts that she is entitled to asylum on the basis of her membership in the particular social group, “Guatemalan woman.” Exh. 5A. For the reasons set forth below, the Court finds that this social group is immutable, particular, and socially distinct under the specific facts of Respondent’s case.

i. Immutable

Respondent’s social group is immutable because it consists of two innate characteristics that are fundamental to an individual’s identity. Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 233; See also, A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 320 (reaffirming the common immutable characteristic standard set forth in Acosta). “Guatemalan” and “women,” or nationality and gender, are prototypical examples of immutable characteristics because one cannot change, or should not be required to change one’s nationality and gender. Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 233; Fatin, 12 F.3d at 1233. Moreover, in Acosta, the Board specifically concluded that “sex” is a “shared characteristic” on which particular social group membership can be based. See Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 233. Therefore, analyzing Respondent’s two traits together, the Court finds that “Guatemalan women” describes immutable characteristics.

ii. Particular

Respondent’s articulated group is also sufficiently particular. The particularity analysis focuses on whether the terms defining the group are sufficiently objective to establish a group with “discrete and definable boundaries.” See M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 239; Matter of W-Y-C- & H-O-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 189. These defining characteristics will provide a clear benchmark for determining who falls within a group and who does not. M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 239. A group that is “amorphous, overbroad, diffuse, or subjective,” shall not fulfill these requirements. Id. Here, the terms that define Respondent’s group are clear and precise, as gender and nationality both have commonly understood meanings that are unlikely to change when defined by different persons. See Matter of A-M-E- & J-G-U-, 24 I&N Dec. 69, 76 (BIA 2007) (finding that the particular social group defined by “affluent Guatemalans” was not particular because “affluence is simply too subjective, inchoate, and variable.”). Accordingly, Respondent’s group is not amorphous because its defining terms provide an adequate benchmark, gender, for determining group membership. Id. Thus, the boundaries of the group are identifiable: women in Guatemala are members, while men are not.

The Court recognizes that Respondent’s social group is large; however, the size of a group does not necessarily preclude a particularity finding. The Board has routinely upheld large social groups despite its recognition that size is a factor that should be considered in the analysis. In S-E-G-, the Board stated that “while size of the group may be an important factor in determining whether the group can be so recognized, the key question is whether the proposed definition is sufficiently particular or is too amorphous . . . to create a benchmark for determining group membership.” 24 I&N Dec. 579, 584 (BIA 2008). This affirms the reasoning in Matter of H-, in which the Board found that Somali clans constitute a particular social group, despite the fact that some number in the millions. 21 I&N Dec. 337 (BIA 1996); see also Mohammed v. Gonzalez, 400 F.3d 785 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding a group comprised of “Somali females” to be a cognizable social group given the widespread practice of female genital mutilation); Cece v. Holder, 733 F.3d 662, 674–75 (7th Cir. 2011) and Perdomo v. Holder, 611 F.3d 662, 669 (9th Cir. 2005) (rejecting the notion that a group can be too large to be a particular social group). Similarly, the Board has repeatedly upheld particular social groups based on sexual orientation as cognizable, even though such groups are sizeable. Matter of Toboso-Alfonso, 20 I&N Dec. 819, 822–23 (BIA 1990) (recognizing “homosexuals . . . in Cuba” as members of a particular social group); W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 219 (affirming “homosexuals in Cuba” as a particular social group because, in part, it is defined with particularity). In these cases, and as explained by S-E-G-, the “key question” is not the group’s size, but whether the definition provides an adequate benchmark for determining who is a member and who is not based on the record at hand. The dispositive factor in Matter of H- was the shared kinship and linguistic attributes of clan members. 21 I&N Dec. at 343. In Respondent’s case, the benchmark determinant is a combination of nationality and gender.

The Court’s analysis of sizeable and diverse groups is consistent with the Attorney General’s decision in A-B-, which contains several statements, in dicta, cautioning against such groups. A-B- surmises that social groups composed of “broad swaths of society” are likely insufficiently particular, as they may be “too diffuse to be recognized as a particular social group.” A-B-, 27 I&N at 335 (citing Constanza v. Holder, 647 F.3d. 749, 754 (8th Cir. 2011)). For example, a group composed of “victims of gang violence” may not be particular because members “often come from all segments of society, and they possess no distinguishing characteristic or concrete trait that would readily identify them as members of such a group. A-B-, 27 I&N at 335. This echoes the Board’s decision in W-G-R-, which struck down a social group based on former gang membership because the respondent had not established that Salvadoran society would “generally agree on who is included” in the group. 26 I&N Dec. at 221 (finding the proposed group lacked particularity “because it is too diffuse, as well as being too broad and subjective” as it “could include persons of any age, sex, or background”). However, the shortcomings considered in A-B- and W-G-R- are not present in this case because Respondent’s group possesses an objective, distinguishing characteristic: gender. As explained below, and as evidenced by the facts on the record, this characteristic enables Guatemalan society to readily identify group members, despite the presence of other diverse characteristics. Moreover, A-B-, reiterates the necessity for a fact-based, case-by-case inquiry in the social group analysis, a mandate which cannot be squared with a broad prohibition against large, diverse social groups. A-B-, 27 I&N at 344; W-Y-C- & H-O-B-, 27 I&N at 189. In this case, and on this record, the facts demonstrate that Respondent’s social group exists in Guatemala and is consistent with the requirements of M-E-V-G- and W-G-R-.

Importantly, the Court notes as a final point that none of the other protected grounds in INA § 101(a)(42) are limited by size or prohibit diverse membership. A nation may host millions of members of a particular religion, yet these individuals are not precluded from asylum if persecuted. Likewise, religious groups are composed of individuals with a wide variety of characteristics and experiences. Each protected ground is bounded by an immutable characteristic. See Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 233. Thus, it follows that a proposed social group that establishes clear boundaries by way of its immutable characteristics is cognizable under the Act regardless of its size or internal diversity. Accordingly, Respondent’s proposed social group “Guatemalan women” meets the particularly requirement.

iii. Socially Distinct

Finally, Respondent’s proposed social group is socially distinct. In M-E-V-G-, the Board explained that “[a] viable particular social group should be perceived within the given society as a sufficiently distinct group,” and that “[t]he members of a particular social group will generally understand their own affiliation with the grouping, as will other people in the particular society.” 26 I&N Dec. 227, 238; see also W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 217 (stating that “social distinction exists where the relevant society perceives, considers, or recognizes the group as a distinct social group”). Through Respondent’s testimony and documentary evidence, she has established that Guatemalan society perceives women as sufficiently distinct from society as a whole to qualify as a particular social group.

As noted above, violence against women is one of the principal human rights abuses in Guatemala today. Exh. 5, Tab B at 1. The U.N. Human Rights Committee and the Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination Against Women have repeatedly expressed concern at the “persistence of very high levels of violence against women” in Guatemala. Exh. 4, Tab 11. Forty-five percent of women in Guatemala have suffered some form of violence in their lifetime, and many more have witnessed violence against a female relative. Exh. 5, Tab 7. Violence from criminal armed groups often occur alongside repeated physical and sexual violence at home, which includes life-threatening and degrading forms of domestic violence. Exh. 2, Tab 2. Women who come into contact with gangs are subject to threats, kidnapping, extortion, rape, sexual assault, and murder and as a result, increasing numbers of women and girls are fleeing Guatemala. Exhs. 2, Tab 2; 4, Tab 11. As one Guatemalan woman noted: “The gangs treat women much worse than men. They want us to join as members, but then women are also threatened to be gang members ‘girlfriends’ and are raped, tortured, and abused” if they refuse. Exh. 2, Tab 2. This quote highlights the discord between the treatment of men and women and shows how Respondent’s social group is distinct in Guatemalan society. It also shows how a group comprised of “Guatemalan women” is different from other social groups defined by vulnerability to harm, such as those who resist gang recruitment and who face violence from only a discrete segment of the population.

Recently, the Guatemalan government has recognized that Guatemalan women require special protection, as their law enforcement needs are different than other victims. The government enacted a femicide law in 2008, which criminalized gender motivated violence. Exh. 4, Tab 11. It also established a special prosecutor and court for female crime victims, as well as a 24-hour court in Guatemala City to offer services related to violence against women, including sexual assault, exploitation, and trafficking of women and girls. Exhs. 5, Tab B at 17; Unmarked Exh. 7 at 17. These reforms illustrate how the abuse of women is tied to circumstances that only women suffer. However, despite these reforms, violence against women remains a serious problem, in part because both the general public and state actors continue to view it as normal. Exh. 4, Tab 11. The public fails to view violence against women as unusual due to its decades-long acceptance. Id. Similarly, its normalization has created a lack of political will towards investigating and prosecuting gender-motivated crimes. Id. In an effort to change these views, the U.N. Human Rights Committee recently recommended that Guatemalan schools include women’s rights and protection of women from violence in its curricula. Exh. 4, Tab 11. This reluctance to protect women, despite efforts by state and international organizations, further demonstrates how women are viewed as a separate, subordinate group within Guatemala.

The Court emphasizes that Respondent’s articulated social group is perceived by Guatemalan society independently from any group member’s experienced persecution. Thus, Respondent’s articulated group is neither defined solely by the persecutor’s perception nor by its persecution, despite the Court’s discussion of violence against women in its analysis. See M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 242 (cautioning that the persecutors’ perception is not itself enough to make a group socially distinct); A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 317 (holding that the social group must “exist[s] independently of the alleged underlying harm”); Lukwago v. Ashcroft, 329 F.3d at 172. Here, recognizing the nation-wide epidemic of violence against women informs the recognition of Respondent’s social group as opposed to creating it. In other words, the persecution faced by women may act as the catalyst that causes Guatemalan society to meaningfully distinguish the group, but the defining immutable characteristic exists independently of that persecution. M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 243; see also W-G-R-, 26 I&N at 237 (clarifying that persecutor’s perceptions may be relevant because it is indicative of whether society views the group as distinct). As such, Respondent has shown that Guatemalan women are “set apart, or distinct, from other persons within [Guatemala] in some significant way.” M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 238. Therefore, Respondent’s articulated social group meets the requirements for social distinction and is cognizable under the Act.³

³ Because the Court finds that “Guatemalan women” is a cognizable particular social group, the Court need not address the cognizability of Respondent’s alternative social group, “Guatemalan women living in households without male relatives.”

c. Nexus

In addition to establishing a cognizable particular social group, Respondent must also show that the harm she fears would be inflicted on account of her membership in that social group. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1). To demonstrate a nexus to a protected ground, an applicant need not show that she would be persecuted exclusively on account of the protected ground, but that the protected ground would be “one central reason” for the feared persecution, not just an “‘incidental, tangential, or superficial’ reason for persecution.” Ndayshimiye v. Atty’s Gen., 557 F.3d 124, 130 (3d Cir. 2009); Matter of J-B-N- & S-M-, 24 I&N Dec. 208, 212–13 (BIA 2007). The Third Circuit has stressed that the proper standard is “one central reason” and not “the central reason.” See Ndayshimiye, 557 at 129–31 (finding that the BIA’s decision in J-B-N- & S-M- is not entitled to Chevron deference to the extent that it suggests a hierarchy of motives). The question of a persecutor’s motive will involve a particularized evaluation of the specific facts and evidence in an individual claim. See L-E-A-, 27 I&N Dec. at 44 (citing Matter of N-M-, 25 I&N Dec. 526, 530 (BIA 2011)).⁴ In making this determination, the Court can consider both direct and circumstantial evidence of a persecutor’s motive, and may make reasonable inferences based on the evidence in the record. L-E-A-, 27 I&N Dec. at 44.

Here, in drawing all reasonable inferences based on the evidence in the record, the Court finds that Respondent’s status as a “Guatemalan woman” would be “one central reason” for her feared persecution. Respondent testified that women in Guatemala are targeted for harm simply because of their gender, an assertion which receives support from Respondent’s own experiences. Respondent testified that she did not know or have any prior experiences with the man who accosted her or the men who catcalled her on the street. Given that she had no prior connection to these men, it is reasonable to infer that some other overt characteristic caused the men to take an interest in Respondent, such as her gender. Various anecdotal stories provided in the country conditions evidence confirm that women are targeted at such high rates in Guatemala because of their gender, which, according to Guatemalan society, makes them inferior and subservient to men. Exh. 2, Tab 2. While gangs or other actors may have mixed motives for harming women, these motives do not change the fact that women are specifically targeted for harm based on how gangs, and Guatemalan society as whole, view women and their worth in Guatemalan society. In this environment, Respondent’s status as a “Guatemalan woman” would be “one central reason” for her feared persecution.

d. Government Unable or Unwilling to Control

Respondent also must demonstrate that her well-founded fear of future persecution would be committed by the Guatemalan government, or by forces the government is unable or unwilling to control.⁵ See Gao, 299 F.3d at 272. Here, the evidence in the record demonstrates that the ⁴ The Court is aware that the Attorney General stayed L-E-A- on December 3, 2018. See 27 I&N Dec. 494 (A.G. 2018). Nonetheless, the Court considers L-E-A- as persuasive authority in its analysis of the statutory nexus requirement in this case.

⁵ The Attorney General in A-B- reaffirmed the “unable or unwilling to control” standard set forth in Gao, but also held that an asylum applicant must show that the government “condoned” the private actors or at least “demonstrated a complete helplessness to protect the victims,” citing to a case from the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals (“Seventh Circuit”). 27 I&N Dec. at 337 (citing Galina v. INS, 213 F.3d 955, 958 (7th Cir. 2000)). Thus, the Attorney General sets forth three different standards: “unable or unwilling to control,” “condoned,” and “complete helplessness.” A-B-

Guatemalan government is both unable and unwilling to control violence against women, especially and including gang violence against women. Deeply-entrenched biases regarding the status of women in Guatemala have resulted in wide acceptance of violence against women, including by the police and judiciary. Exh. 4, Tab 11. Some officials, including judges and police officers, have refused to investigate crimes against women due to the appearance or attire of the victim. Id. As of September 8, the PNC reported forty-eight open investigations against officers for violence or discrimination against women or children. Unmarked Exh. 7 at 17. Despite the strides made by the International Commission against Impunity in Guatemala (“CICIG”), an organization responsible for investigating and prosecuting corrupt officials and narco-interests, President Morales recently announced he would not renew the organization’s mandate, a move viewed by the UN and the Guatemalan Constitutional court as condonation of the violence in Guatemala. Id. at 1.

Compounding these problems is the fact that the PNC is understaffed, underfunded, and inadequately trained on how to investigate crimes against women. Exh. 2, Tab 3. For example, support for victims of sexual assault is lacking outside of major cities, and arrest and prosecution of assailants in sexual assault cases is difficult without private legal assistance. Id. The result of the biases against women and the inadequacy of the state institutions in Guatemala is virtual impunity for gender-based crimes. Id. Guatemala has the third highest rate of femicide in the world, with a conviction rate of only one to two percent. Exh. 4, Tab 11. Between 2012 and April 2016, the judicial system handed down 391 sentences for femicide, but in the same period, the National Institute of Forensic Sciences performed 2,512 autopsies on women who died violently. Exh. 5, Tab 6. Moreover, in the first ten months of 2015, there were 11,449 complaints of physical or sexual assault and 29,128 reports of domestic violence, yet there were only 527 and 141 convictions for those crimes, respectively. Id. In light of this evidence, it is clear that the Guatemalan government is unable and unwilling to control violence against women. Therefore, Respondent has established a well-founded fear of future persecution by an actor the Guatemalan government is unable and unwilling to control.

e. Discretion

An applicant who establishes statutory eligibility for asylum still bears the burden of demonstrating that she merits a grant of asylum as a matter of discretion. See INA § 208(b)(1)(A).

, 27 I&N Dec. at 337. This conflicting language leaves the Court with questions as to what standard to apply when adjudicating asylum applications. To resolve this issue, the Court has reviewed relevant Board and Third Circuit precedent. In O-Z- & I-Z-, which remains controlling Board precedent, the Board paired the term “unable and unwilling to control” with the term “condoned,” indicating to the Court that the two terms are the same, legally, for purposes of an asylum analysis. 299 F.3d at 26. Moreover, it is clear from a review of Third Circuit case law that “unable or unwilling to control” is the governing standard in the Third Circuit. See e.g., Gao, 299 F.3d at 272. The Court could not find a Board or Third Circuit case that uses or interprets the term “complete helplessness” as used by the Attorney General in A-B- and the Seventh Circuit in Galina. Absent such controlling case law, the Court chooses to apply the “unable or unwilling to control” standard when analyzing Respondent’s asylum claim. This interpretation is consistent with the D.C. District Court’s recent decision in Grace v. Whitaker, 344 F.Supp.3d 96, 130 (D.D.C. 2018) (“The “unwilling or unable” persecution standard was settled at the time the Refugee Act was codified, and therefore the Attorney General’s “condoned” or “complete helplessness” standard is not a permissible construction of the persecution requirement.”).

In determining whether a favorable exercise of discretion is warranted, both favorable and adverse factors should be considered, Pula, 19 I&N Dec. at 473, including adverse factors such as “the circumvention of orderly refugee procedures,” A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 345 n.12, and humanitarian factors, such as age, health, and family ties. Matter of H-, 21 I&N Dec. at 348. The danger of persecution should outweigh all but the most egregious adverse factors. Pula 19 I&N Dec. at 473.

Here, the only adverse factor present in Respondent’s case is her entry into the United States without inspection. This one factor is not so egregious as to warrant a denial of Respondent’s asylum claim when compared with the numerous favorable factors present in her case. Respondent has lived in the United States for over four years and resides in Philadelphia with her parents. She graduated from Northeast High School in June 2018 and hopes to attend college to study nursing in the future. See Exh. 4, Tab 9. Respondent has not had any criminal contacts in the United States and faces an articulable risk of harm if she is returned to Guatemala. For these reasons, the Court finds that Respondent’s case merits a favorable exercise of discretion.

C. Withholding of Removal and Withholding of Removal under the CAT

As the Court grants Respondent asylum under INA § 208, the Court does not reach her application for withholding of removal pursuant to INA § 241(b)(3) or her request for protection under the CAT.

VII. Conclusion

Respondent has demonstrated a well-founded fear of future persecution on her account of her membership in the particular social group, “Guatemalan women.” Respondent has also demonstrated that she merits asylum as a matter of discretion. Therefore, the Court grants Respondent asylum pursuant to INA § 208.

Accordingly, the Court enters the following order:

ORDER

ORDER: IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Respondent [REDACTED]’s application for asylum pursuant to section 208 of the Act be GRANTED.

then possess valid entry documents. Id. Lead Respondent expressed fear of returning to Mexico, and on [redacted], an Asylum Officer (AO) interviewed her and found her fear credible. Exhibit 2 (Credible Fear Worksheet). Accordingly, the Department of Homeland Security (DHS or the Department) served Respondents with NTAs, charging them as inadmissible to the United States under section 212(a)(7)(A)(i)(I) of the Act. Exhibits 1, 1a, 1b. On [redacted], the Department filed Respondents' NTAs with the immigration court, which in turn served Respondents with Notices of Hearing on [redacted], thereby vesting jurisdiction with the Court and initiating removal proceedings. 8 C.F.R. § 1003.14; Matter of Bermudez-Cota, 27 I&N Dec. 441 (BIA 2018).

On [redacted], Lead Respondent filed a Form I-589, Application for Asylum and for Withholding of Removal (I-589), listing her children as derivative applicants under section 208(3)(a) of the Act.¹ On [redacted] Respondents, through counsel, admitted the allegations in their NTAs and conceded the charge of removability. The Court directed Mexico as the country of removal, should removal be necessary. Lead Respondent appeared for a merits hearing on [redacted], and testified in support of her application. Lead Respondent's mother, [redacted], also testified on Lead Respondent's behalf. The Department did not call any witnesses.

For the reasons set forth below, the Court grants Respondent's I-589 application.

II. Documentary Evidence

The Record of Proceeding includes fifteen exhibits. The Court has given thorough consideration to all evidence submitted, regardless of whether that evidence is specifically named in this decision.

III. Testimony

As the Court finds Lead Respondent and her mother credible, it presents their testimony here in narrative form.

A. Lead Respondent's Testimony

Lead Respondent grew up in [redacted] Mexico. In [redacted], she came to the United States to attend [redacted] in [redacted]. While in the United States, Lead Respondent had two children, though she did not marry their father. After Lead Respondent graduated [redacted] she returned to Mexico with her children to study [redacted] and [redacted] college. However, she was forced to drop out [redacted] when her son, who was less than [redacted] year old at the time, became ill.

Around this time, in [redacted], Lead Respondent met [redacted] and began a relationship with him. Initially, he was respectful, kind, and courteous with her and her children. On [redacted], Lead Respondent moved in with [redacted]. Shortly thereafter, she learned she

On that occasion, took Lead Respondent's daughter, , out of arms. They called the police, but one of the local officers who responded to the call was cousin, so he did not do anything. spoke to the cousin, and threatened to call the non-local police if did not return. This prompted the cousin to speak with and tell him to return the because he had kidnapped her. confirmed that no one arrested or reprimanded also explained that her daughter made many police reports, and confirmed that the police would not turn those reports over to her unless Lead Respondent collected them in person. stated that she never saw the police respond to any of Lead Respondent's complaints. After Lead Respondent left Mexico, called and told her that he wanted his daughters, and if Lead Respondent returned to Mexico, he would kill her.

IV. Asylum

Asylum is a discretionary form of relief available to aliens physically present or arriving in the United States, who apply for relief in accordance with sections 208 or 235(b) of the Act. INA § 208(a)(1); see INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 444 (1987).

A. Timeliness – One Year Asylum Deadline

To be eligible for asylum, an applicant must demonstrate by clear and convincing evidence that she filed her asylum application within one year of her last entry into the United States. INA § 208(a)(2)(B); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.4(a)(2)(i). Lead Respondent arrived in the United States on , and filed her asylum application on . Therefore, her application is timely.

B. Credibility and Corroboration

In all applications for asylum and withholding of removal, the Court must make a threshold determination of the applicant's credibility. INA §§ 208(b)(1)(B)(ii)-(iii), 241(b)(3)(C); Matter of O-D-, 21 I&N Dec. 1079, 1081 (BIA 1998). The applicant's testimony, standing alone, may be sufficient to meet the burden of proof if it is credible, persuasive, and probative of facts sufficient to demonstrate that the applicant is a refugee. Id.; see also INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(ii); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(a); Matter of Dass, 20 I&N Dec. 120, 124 (BIA 1989). Testimony is not credible if it is inconsistent, inherently improbable, or contradicts current country conditions. Matter of S-M-J-, 21 I&N Dec. 722, 729 (BIA 1997). The following factors may be considered in assessing the applicant's credibility: demeanor, candor, responsiveness, inherent plausibility of the claim, the consistency between oral and written statements, the internal consistency of such statements, the consistency of such statements with evidence of record, and any inaccuracy or falsehood in such statements, regardless of whether it goes to the heart of the applicant's claim. INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(iii); Matter of J-Y-C-, 24 I&N Dec. 260, 262 (BIA 2007); Matter of S-B-, 24 I&N Dec. 42, 43 n.1 (BIA 2006). In some cases, the applicant may be found credible even if she has trouble remembering specific facts or there is ambiguity regarding an aspect of her claim. See, e.g., Matter of B-, 21 I&N Dec. 66, 70-71 (BIA 1995); Matter of Y-B-, 21 I&N Dec. 1136, 1139 (BIA 1998).

The Court finds that both Lead Respondent and [redacted] testified credibly. Their testimony remained consistent during direct and cross-examination and conformed to the information provided in Lead Respondent's application for relief. Additionally, Lead Respondent's testimony was consistent with [redacted]. Though Lead Respondent described an incident in her affidavit that she did not describe during her testimony, an occasion when [redacted] hit her so hard she passed out and woke up undressed in the bed, this omission does not undermine her credibility considering how often [redacted] beat her. Matter of A-S-, 21 I&N Dec. 1106, 1109-10 (BIA 1998) (minor and isolated discrepancies in the applicant's testimony are not necessarily fatal to credibility). Similarly, although there were some minor inconsistencies in dates between her testimony and her statements to the AO who interviewed her, they are not significant enough to make Lead Respondent not credible. The Court also had an opportunity to observe Lead Respondent's and [redacted] demeanor and other nonverbal indicators, and their testimony appeared authentic and genuinely based in fact. Thus, upon careful consideration of the facts of record and the witnesses' testimony, the Court finds Lead Respondent and [redacted] credible.

C. Refugee Status

An asylum applicant bears the burden of proving that she is a "refugee" as defined in section 101(a)(42) of the Act. INA § 208(b)(1); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(a). This requires the applicant to prove that she is outside her country of nationality and is unable or unwilling to return to or avail herself of that country's protection because she has suffered past persecution or has a well-founded fear of future persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. INA § 101(a)(42); INS v. Elias-Zacarias, 502 U.S. 478, 481 (1992); Matter of M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. 227, 230 (BIA 2014).

1. Past Persecution

An applicant who can demonstrate that she suffered past persecution on account of a protected ground is entitled to the presumption that she has a well-founded fear of future persecution. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1). An applicant alleging past persecution must establish that: (1) she suffered harm rising to the level of persecution; (2) the persecution was on account of a protected ground; and (3) the persecution was committed by the government or by a force the government is unable or unwilling to control. Id.

a. Severity of Harm

To qualify for asylum based on past persecution, an applicant must show that the harm she suffered rose to the level of persecution. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1). Persecution is a threat to life or freedom or the infliction of suffering or harm upon those who differ, in a way that is regarded as offensive. Woldemeskel v. INS, 257 F.3d 1185, 1188 (10th Cir. 2001); Matter of Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. 211, 222 (BIA 1985). In order for such acts to rise to the level of persecution, they must be “more than just restrictions or threats to life and liberty.” Woldemeskel, 257 F.3d at 1188; see also Hayrapetyan v. Mukasey, 534 F.3d 1330, 1337 (10th Cir. 2008). In determining whether an applicant experienced harm constituting persecution, the Court considers incidents in the aggregate. See Hayrapetyan, 534 F.3d at 1337-38; see also Matter of O-Z- & I-Z-, 22 I&N Dec. 23, 26 (BIA 1998).

The harm Lead Respondent experienced in Mexico consisted of threats, recurring physical and verbal assaults, and the kidnapping of her child. These incidents occurred throughout her relationship with [redacted], from [redacted]. [redacted] regularly threatened to take Lead Respondent’s children away from her, and told her she could never leave him. He hit her face, pulled her by the hair, and pushed her onto the ground while she was pregnant, causing her to develop a blood clot on her uterus. On one occasion, he hit her in the face so badly that her wounds took a week to fade. On another occasion, he hit her so hard in her chest that she passed out and did not regain consciousness until the next morning, when she woke to find herself undressed in the bed. Finally, on at least two occasions, [redacted] took one of Lead Respondent’s daughters away from her and refused to return the child until persuaded to by others. On each of the three occasions that Lead Respondent attempted to escape [redacted], he tracked her down and forced her to return to their home in [redacted]. [redacted] also isolated Lead Respondent, preventing her from working or finishing her college degree, and physically and verbally abusing her when she left the house without his permission. He tried to separate her from her family members as well. He once beat up Lead Respondent’s brother, and threatened her family members after she arrived in the United States.

The Court finds that the harm Lead Respondent experienced rises to the level of persecution. [redacted] severely and repeatedly beat Lead Respondent, and refused to let her leave him. Further, he repeatedly threatened to take Lead Respondent’s children away from her, and one time, he actually did. During the incident that caused Lead Respondent to flee Mexico, [redacted] almost choked her to death. Had her daughter not intervened, [redacted] might have succeeded in killing Lead Respondent. He repeatedly told her she could never leave him, and fulfilled this promise by finding her every time she tried to leave. [redacted]’s beatings caused so much damage that Lead Respondent’s friends and family members noticed and encouraged her to leave him. However, he isolated her so successfully that she could not escape. His beatings were also accompanied by verbal abuse, as he regularly humiliated her and told her she was alone. In sum, while each incident alone might not have risen to persecution, when taken together, they easily meet this high threshold. Hayrapetyan, 534 F.3d 1330 (finding an asylum applicant’s cumulative harm, which included threats and beatings, constituted past persecution). The Court, therefore, finds that the threats, beatings, and injuries [redacted] inflicted on Lead Respondent rise to the level of persecution as contemplated under the Act.

b. Protected Ground

To establish past persecution, an asylum applicant must demonstrate that such persecution was “on account of” race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.16(b); see Elias-Zacarias, 502 U.S. 478.

Lead Respondent argues that she was persecuted in Mexico on account of her membership in five particular social groups: “Mexican women”; “Mexican mothers”; “Mexican women in a domestic relationship who are unable to leave the relationship”; “Mexican mothers in a domestic relationship unable to leave the relationship”; and “Mexican women who favor women’s rights, equality, and autonomy.” To establish persecution on account of membership in a particular social group, an applicant must demonstrate the existence of a cognizable particular social group, her membership therein, and a nexus between her persecution and her membership in that group. Matter of W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. 208, 223 (BIA 2014). To be cognizable, a particular social group must be “(1) composed of members who share a common immutable characteristic, (2) defined with particularity, and (3) socially distinct within the society in question.” M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. 227, 237 (BIA 2014); see also Rivera Barrientos v. Holder, 658 F.3d 1222, 1229 (10th Cir. 2011).

i. Mexican women

First, Lead Respondent argues that [redacted] persecuted her on account of her membership in the particular social group defined as “Mexican women.” The Board and the Tenth Circuit Court of Appeals have left open the question of whether “women” in a particular country, without any other defining characteristics, can constitute a particular social group. See Lopez v. Sessions, Nos. 17-9517 & 17-9531, 2018 WL 3730137 (10th Cir. Aug. 6, 2018) (unpublished) (McKay, J., dissenting) (asserting that Tenth Circuit case law has “left open the possibility that gender alone could be sufficient to satisfy the immigration standard [of a protected ground]”).

In Matter of A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. 316 (A.G. 2018), abrogated by Grace v. Whitaker, 344 F. Supp. 3d 96 (D.D.C. 2018), the Attorney General breathed new life into the analysis of whether gender-based persecution among private individuals may serve as the foundation of a particular social group. A-B-, however, only considers gender-based persecution at the intersection of domestic violence, specifically where a man abuses a woman as part of a personal, often intimate, relationship. In doing so, it avoids addressing the most common form of gender-based asylum claims, where a woman faces persecution for no other reason besides her status as a woman, regardless of whether she is in an intimate relationship. Accordingly, while A-B- extrapolates on the viability of gender-based asylum claims between private parties in domestic relationships, it does not address whether societal, gender-based violence is alone sufficient for women in a particular country to constitute a cognizable social group under the Act. Moreover, A-B- does not and cannot change the ultimate inquiry in cases such as this: “[T]he focus with respect to such claims should not be on whether either gender constitutes a social group (which both certainly do) but on whether the members of that group are sufficiently likely to be persecuted that one could say that they are persecuted ‘on account of’ their membership.” Niang v. Gonzalez, 422 F.3d 1187, 1199-200 (10th Cir. 2005) (quoting INA § 101(a)(42)(A)).

The unfortunate reality is that many countries marginalize women as second-class citizens. Sometimes this occurs through laws that grant men and women different rights, and in other instances religion or long-established cultural traditions relegate women to inferior social statuses. Where a society institutionalizes laws that permit violence against women or holds women and men in unequal standing, there is no reason why gender or sex should not align with the definition of a “refugee” and be treated as tantamount to the broad, protected classes of race, religion, and political opinion. In the years since 1951, when the Refugee Convention was drafted, significant developments in women’s rights have reshaped the way women are treated in many parts of the world. In fact, most countries have taken steps to recognize and respond to the challenges women face in male-dominated societies. See, e.g., United Nations Human Rights Commission, Convention on the Elimination of All Forms of Discrimination Against Women (1979) (committing to eliminate gender-based discrimination worldwide); Civil Rights Act of 1964, 42 U.S.C. § 2000e (1964) (prohibiting discrimination on the basis of sex in the United States). Indeed, if the Refugee Convention were drafted in more modern times, it likely would have recognized gender and sex as distinct classes as it did race, religion, nationality, and political opinion.

Nevertheless, even if “sex” or “gender” were codified as protected grounds, not all women would qualify as refugees, just as not all races, nationalities, or persons of a certain religious affiliation or political opinion are refugees. Most countries now recognize gender equality and condemn violence against women, by law if not in practice. Of course, there are some that do not, and the Court does not discount the possibility that “women” in certain countries, under certain situations, may constitute a cognizable social group without any additional defining characteristics. See Perdomo v. Holder, 611 F.3d 662 (9th Cir. 2010) (acknowledging that “women in a particular country . . . could form a particular social group,” irrespective of other defining features, to conclude that “all women in Guatemala” is a cognizable social group). As such, the ultimate determination of whether “women” in a particular country constitute a cognizable social group requires a country-specific, fact-intensive analysis. There are some countries in which women are parceled out as a whole, irrespective of other defining characteristics, and subjected to misogynistic laws or customs that undermine their rights and condone gender-based violence. See, e.g., Mohammed v. Gonzales, 400 F.3d 785 (9th Cir. 2005) (finding, based on country-specific circumstances in Somalia, that “Somalian females” constitutes a cognizable social group because persecution against women is “deeply imbedded in the culture throughout the nation and performed on approximately 98 percent of all females”); Lopez, 2018 WL 3730137, at *6 (McKay, J., dissenting) (“The record in this case strongly supports the conclusion that women in El Salvador face . . . persecution [‘on account of their membership in this particular, albeit large, social group.]”).

Turning to the case at hand, the Court finds the social group defined as “Mexican women” cognizable. First, gender and nationality both constitute immutable characteristics that individuals cannot and should not be required to change. See INA § 101(a)(42) (listing nationality as a protected ground); Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 233 (listing sex as a paradigmatic example of a common, immutable characteristic).

Second, the group of Mexican women is sufficiently particular. A social group is particular if “the proposed group can accurately be described in a manner sufficiently distinct that the group would be recognized, in the society in question, as a discrete class of persons.” Matter of S-E-G-, 24 I&N Dec. 579, 584 (BIA 2008). The terms used to describe the group must have commonly accepted definitions and defined boundaries within the society in which the group is a part, and may not be amorphous, overbroad, diffuse, or subjective. M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 239 (citing Ochoa v. Gonzales, 406 F.3d 1166, 1170-71 (9th Cir. 2005)). Though it is a large group, the term “women” has a commonly accepted definition in Mexico, as it does in most societies. In fact, Mexico has laws that apply specifically to women, suggesting that the term is discrete, and has legally definable boundaries. See Exhibit 6 at 26 (U.S. Dep’t of State, Mexico 2017 Human Rights Report(2018)) (DOS Report) (stating that “[a]ccording to the law, the crime of femicide is the murder of a woman committed because of the victim’s gender and is a federal offense punishable if convicted by 40 to 60 years in prison”). Moreover, women constitute a precise, albeit large, segment of society, and the term is neither vague nor amorphous.

Finally, the group composed of Mexican women is also socially distinct. To establish social distinction, there must be “evidence showing that society in general perceives, considers, or recognizes persons sharing the particular characteristic to be a group.” W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 217. This inquiry must be individualized; whether a proposed group has the requisite social distinction “must be considered in the context of the country of concern and the persecution feared.” Id. at 586-87. Both the Board and the Tenth Circuit have stated that women tend to be viewed as a group by society. See Niang, 422 F.3d at 1199-200; M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 246 (“Social groups based on innate characteristics such as sex . . . are generally easily recognizable and understood by others to constitute social groups.” (quoting Matter of C-A-, 23 I&N Dec. 951, 959 (BIA 2006))). While such a large group may be diverse, this fact does not defeat Lead Respondent’s claim that in Mexico, a woman’s gender alone lands her in a category that determines her treatment. See Niang, 422 F.3d at 1199 (suggesting that a social group containing “half a nation’s residents” may be cognizable depending on the circumstances of their persecution).

Indeed, Lead Respondent has presented abundant evidence describing how women are treated as a group based on their gender. See Exhibit 6 at 26 (DOS Report stating that federal law criminalizes rape, domestic violence, and femicide, but the laws were often unenforced and resources for women victims were lacking); Exhibit 13 at 60 (Human Rights Watch, Mexico (2017)) (HRW Report) (“Mexican laws do not adequately protect women and girls against domestic violence.”); id. at 49 (Amnesty International, Mexico 2017/2018) (AI Report) (“Violence against women remained a major concern; new data showed that two third of women had experienced gender-based violence during their lives.”). Mexican society ascribes specific roles to women and men based exclusively on their gender, indicating that gender is a recognizable trait used to define and identify individuals. Exhibit 13 at 35 (Committee on the Elimination of Discrimination against Women, Alternative Report on Violence against Women in Ciudad Juarez, Chihuahua, Mexico (July 2018) (CEDAW Report) (noting that patterns of violence against women in Mexico stem from “a culture of machismo and subordination of women” and “a culture of discrimination against women based in the erroneous conception of inferiority”). The existence of laws that protect women in Mexico does not undermine this particular social group; rather, it emphasizes that Mexican society views women as a group and recognizes that it is a group in need of protection. Cf. Hassan v. Gonzales, 848 F.3d 513 (8th Cir. 2007) (concluding that “Somali females” is a cognizable social group, because of the overwhelming prevalence of institutionalized violence against Somalian women).

It is clear that Mexico is a country where women are broadly, as a group, subjected to persecution. Country conditions in Mexico demonstrate these circumstances. Gender-based violence is ubiquitous in Mexico. See, e.g., Exhibit 6 at 26 (DOS Report stating that state laws in Mexico addressing domestic violence “largely failed to meet the required federal standards and often were unenforced” and stating that despite the existence of some shelters and justice centers, “the number of cases far surpassed institutional capacity”); Exhibit 13 at 52 (AI Report stating that “[g]ender-based violence against women and girls was widespread”); id. at 60 (HRW Report stating that “Mexican laws do not adequately protect women and girls against domestic and sexual violence” and noting that some laws “make the severity of punishments for some sexual offenses contingent upon the ‘chastity’ of the victim”). See id. Country condition reports illustrate universal inequality between Mexican men and women. See, e.g., Exhibit 13 (multiple reports detailing endemic domestic violence and femicide, despite the laws on the books). Thus, as Lead Respondent has established that the group of “Mexican women” is immutable, particular, and socially distinct, the Court finds that it constitutes a cognizable particular social group.

ii. Mexican mothers

Lead Respondent claims that she is a member of a second social group: “Mexican others.” The Court, however, concludes that this group is not cognizable. While the record contains evidence that women as a whole are considered a particular social group, the evidence does not support the contention that Mexican mothers are considered socially distinct. Moreover, country conditions suggest that violence against women is widespread throughout the country regardless of whether women have had children. See generally Exhibit 13. Indeed, the Record reflects no laws pertaining to mothers in particular, as opposed to women in general. Id. Therefore, the Court concludes that Mexican mothers is not a cognizable social group.

iii. Mexican women or mothers unable to leave domestic relationships

Lead Respondent’s next proposed social groups are composed of both Mexican women and Mexican mothers who are in domestic relationships and unable to leave those domestic relationships. Domestic relationships can take many forms; thus, the group lacks the definable benchmarks necessary to satisfy the particularity requirement. Moreover, as with Mexican mothers, country conditions suggest that violence against women is widespread throughout the country regardless of whether women are in domestic relationships. See generally Exhibit 13. Thus, the evidence is insufficient to show that Mexican society views women unable to leave domestic relationships—or even women in domestic relationships—as a socially distinct group.

iv. Mexican women who believe in women’s rights

Lead Respondent’s fifth social group, “Mexican women who favor women’s rights, equality, and autonomy,” is also not cognizable. Like the previous social groups, this group is not particular, as it lacks clear or definable benchmarks to determine its membership. M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 239. The terms “women’s rights,” “equality,” and “autonomy” are all vague, subjective terms. Additionally, it is unclear what form “believ[ing] in” women’s rights would take; it could mean anything from actively and publicly promoting the advancement of women to, as here, desiring to obtain a college degree and work outside the home. Additionally, individuals who believe in women’s equality and autonomy may change the way they view those rights over time, and they may manifest their changing beliefs in different manners. Moreover, the group is not socially distinct, as the record contains insufficient evidence demonstrating whether Mexican society views women who believe in women’s rights as socially distinct. See generally Exhibit 13. As this social group is neither particular nor socially distinct, it is not cognizable for asylum purposes.

c. Nexus

The Court has concluded that “Mexican women” constitutes a particular social group for asylum purposes. However, Lead Respondent must also establish a nexus between her membership in that group and persecution. The Court will find a nexus between an applicant’s persecution and a protected ground if the protected ground is “at least one central reason” that motivated her persecutor to harm her. INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i); see also Matter of J-B-N- & S-M-, 24 I&N Dec. 208, 211-12 (BIA 2007). The protected ground cannot play a minor role in the persecution, nor can it be “incidental, tangential, superficial, or subordinate to another reason for harm.” Karki v. Holder, 715 F.3d 792, 800 (10th Cir. 2013) (citations omitted).

Here, Lead Respondent met her burden to show that [redacted] persecuted her on account of her membership in the particular social group of “Mexican women.” Lead Respondent’s testimony demonstrates that [redacted] behavior conforms to the predominant view of traditional gender roles in Mexico. As discussed above, a culture based on “machismo” and women’s inferiority persists throughout Mexico, despite Mexico’s apparent progress in enacting laws aimed at preventing and punishing domestic violence. See Exhibit 13 at 35 (CEDAW Report stating that the State of [redacted] admitted that crimes against women are “influenced by a culture of discrimination against women based in the erroneous conception of inferiority”); id. at 52 (AI Report stating that two thirds of Mexican women above age fifteen have experienced gender-based violence); id. at 60 (HRW Report stating that in some cases, the severity of punishments for sexual offenses depends on the victim’s “chastity”); id. at 141 (Nidia Bautista, Justice for Lesvy: Indifference and Outrage in Response to Gender Violence in Mexico City, North American Congress on Latin America (July 31, 2017)) (NACLA article) (describing the “pervasive government indifference toward violence against women in Mexico”); id. at 149 (Michelle Lara Olmos, Ni una más: Femicides in Mexico, Justice in Mexico (Apr. 4, 2018)) (citing a report concluding that “there has been little change to the overall cultural mindset, which marginalized women as ‘disposable’ and permeat[ed] gender-based violence, and ultimately, femicide”).

At every step, [redacted] actions were informed by Mexico’s traditional culture of machismo, and its deep-seated view of gender relations and a woman’s role in society. Cf. A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 339 (noting that an asylum applicant who’s claim is based on domestic violence must show that her partner “attacked her because he was aware of, and hostile to,” the particular social group to which the applicant belonged). [redacted] comments and conduct show that he viewed himself as the man of the house, and believed that he could treat Lead Respondent as subordinate and inferior. He did not bother to hide his beatings from either the neighbors, his own family, or Lead Respondent's family. Moreover, he prevented Lead Respondent from working and from completing her education, repeatedly telling her that there was no need for her to work or continue her education, as "that's why he's the man of the house." Lead Respondent stated that [redacted] repeatedly humiliated her "to keep [her] in submission." In fact, he sabotaged her efforts to establish independence from him: he got her fired from her job by not letting her leave the car when he dropped her off, and he stopped paying the internet bill when she was trying to complete an online college degree. Moreover, [redacted] refused to let Lead Respondent transport herself; he insisted on driving her anywhere she needed to go, including to her father's funeral. He would not even accept favors from Lead Respondent's parents, because he "wanted to be the man." [redacted] also consistently told Lead Respondent that she could never leave him. However, he never imposed this treatment on any of Lead Respondent's children, supporting Lead Respondent's claim that [redacted] beatings resulted specifically from his views on women rather than from anger or a general desire to control all members of his family. [redacted] behavior demonstrates that he believed he and Lead Respondent both had specifically defined gender roles to fulfill, and he attempted to structure their life around those roles by beating her whenever she attempted to leave him, asserted her will, or violated her assigned gender role in any other way.

Lead Respondent's experience is exceptionally common throughout both Mexico and other Central American countries. See Exhibit 13 at 64-124 (United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Women on the Run: First-Hand Accounts of Refugees Fleeing El Salvador, Guatemala, Honduras, and Mexico (Oct. 2015)) (UNHCR Report) (describing accounts of women attempting to flee abusive, controlling men, and generally explaining that women bear the brunt of violence in the countries included in the report). The UNHCR Report states that "physical and sexual abuse was often accompanied by psychological abuse, including isolation, stalking, and threats to harm family members." Id. at 91. One Mexican woman stated that "a woman is worthless. It is as though your life is not worth anything," and another described being "beaten like a man" by her husband for several years and trying to flee repeatedly, but he always tracked her down. Id. at 83, 91. These experiences precisely mirror Lead Respondent's life with [redacted], and stem from common views on women and gender relations throughout Mexico and Central America as well.

Thus, in light of Lead Respondent's personal experiences and evidence in the Record pertaining to men's views of women and Mexico's patriarchal and machismo-based culture, the Court concludes that Lead Respondent has met her burden to show that her membership in the social group of Mexican women was one central reason for [redacted] continuous harm.

d. Government Involvement

To establish past persecution, an applicant must also demonstrate that she suffered persecution by the government, or by forces the government is unable or unwilling to control. Wiransane, 366 F.3d at 893. Here, Lead Respondent suffered harm at the hands of her domestic partner. Thus, she must establish that the Mexican government was unable or unwilling to protect her, as "[p]ersecution is something a government does,' either directly or indirectly by being unwilling or unable to prevent private misconduct.” A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 319 (quoting Hor v. Gonzales, 400 F.3d 482, 485 (7th Cir. 2005)). “An applicant seeking to establish persecution based on violent conduct of a private actor ‘must show more than “difficulty . . . controlling” private behavior.’” Id. at 337 (quoting Menjivar v. Gonzales, 416 F.3d 918, 921 (8th Cir. 2005)). Additionally, “[t]he fact that the local police have not acted on a particular report of an individual crime does not necessarily mean that the government is unwilling or unable to control crime . . . Applicants must show not just that the crime has gone unpunished, but that the government is unwilling or unable to prevent it.” Id. at 337-38.

The Court concludes that Lead Respondent has met this high burden. First, Lead Respondent’s testimony establishes that on not one, but multiple occasions, the police failed to intervene to help her. She testified that she called the police on several times, and her mother confirmed this. Sometimes, the police never responded to the call. Other times, the police showed up late, long after [redacted] had already left the house. On those occasions, they instructed Lead Respondent to call them when [redacted] returned; however, when she called them back, they never returned to her home or otherwise followed up with her. Moreover, on at least one occasion, Lead Respondent attempted to file a report with the police and they told her to return the next day “because [she] had come after office hours.” She indicated that the police wanted to take pictures and have her visit with the doctor and the psychologist to evaluate her mental state and her injuries, which suggests that the police understood the extent of her pain and suffering but sent her away anyway. And though she “managed to make a report . . . it was never processed because they lack the personnel.” The Court notes that Lead Respondent does not have any of the police reports she filed; however, Lead Respondent explained that the police refused to release the reports to her or anyone she authorized to retrieve the reports unless she appeared before them in person. This sort of bureaucratic obstructionism is consistent with a police system that is unwilling and unable to prevent violence against women. See Exhibit 13 at 89 (UNHCR Report noting, “Sometimes women were unable to report incidents and threats due to bureaucratic excuses”).

DHS repeatedly emphasized the one occasion when [redacted] kidnapped Lead Respondent’s child, who was a baby at the time, and the police helped her. Specifically, [redacted] kidnapped [redacted] and ran away with her to his brother’s house. Lead Respondent and her mother called the local police, and two officers responded to the call. However, one of the officers was [redacted] cousin, and he initially refused to help Lead Respondent. Eventually, Lead Respondent’s mother threatened to call the state police, which convinced [redacted] cousin to tell [redacted] to return the baby. This incident does not demonstrate that the government was willing and able to prevent [redacted] abuse. Importantly, though [redacted] was convinced to return the baby, he was not arrested, and the police took no report. Moreover, there is nothing to indicate that the police would have forced [redacted] to return the child if he did not agree to do so willingly. It is even possible that [redacted] gave in only because his cousin—a family member rather than an anonymous police officer—persuaded him to do so. Additionally, while the threat of calling the state police was effective in this one instance, nothing in the record speaks to what the state police would have done if they had been called. The Court is left with Lead Respondent’s account that, despite many calls to the police, they only helped her on one occasion, and then, only because her mother threatened to involve an external police force. Thus, the police consistently failed to protect Lead Respondent from [redacted] abuse. This systematic failure goes beyond a couple rogue police officers' actions, and the Court will not speculate what a different police force might have done. Cf. Avendano-Hernandez v. Lynch, 800 F.3d 1072, 1078-80 (9th Cir. 2015) (concluding that torture committed by police officers in uniform were acting in an official capacity and it was not a defense that higher-up officials did not direct their torture and rape of a transgender woman); Costa v. Holder, 733 F.3d 13, 17-18 (1st Cir. 2013) (concluding that two rogue police officers do not constitute government action).

Even if the Court engaged in such speculation, however, evidence about country conditions in the Record confirms that Lead Respondent's experience is not unique. Instead, the evidence reveals a police force riddled with incompetence, lack of resources, and corruption, whose members reflect the broader cultural realities of machismo and women's inferiority. Such a police force thoroughly undermines the laws Mexico has enacted to protect women. For example, though the DOS Report confirms that federal law prohibits rape, including spousal rape, and that the crime of femicide carries strict penalties and is a crime in all states, "[f]ederal law does not criminalize spousal abuse." Exhibit 6 at 26. Human Rights Watch reported that "Mexican laws do not adequately protect women and girls against domestic and sexual violence," Exhibit 13 at 60, and Amnesty International reported that the system of "Alerts of gender-based violence against women" active in twelve states "were not shown to have reduced gender-based violence against women and girls," id. at 52. In fact, one report notes, "Women may be equal to men according to enacted legislation, but women do not enjoy the same protections because those laws are consistently not enforced in instances of transgressions of women." Id. at 48 (CEDAW Report); see also id. at 83 (UNHCR Report stating that despite Mexico's laws aimed at protecting women, reporting remains low due to "authorities' ineffective approach to victims, and a perception that cases will not be prosecuted").

Indeed, impunity for perpetrators of gender-based violence remains the norm. Exhibit 6 at 3 (DOS Report noting that the government itself "estimated that 94 percent of crimes were either unreported or not investigated and that underreporting of kidnapping may have been even higher"), 13 ("[I]mpunity, especially for human rights abuses, remained a serious problem. The frequency of prosecution for human rights abuse was extremely low."); Exhibit 13 at 52 (AI Report stating that most cases of gender-based violence "were inadequately investigated and perpetrators enjoyed impunity"); id. at 135 (Vice News article reporting, "Although Mexico has the toughest prison sentences against a person charged with femicide in Latin America . . . the prospect of a long sentence is apparently not a deterrent to end the femicide wave. After all, crimes are rarely if ever investigated and punished in the country. In 2013, 93.8 percent of crimes were not prosecuted in Mexico, according to the 2014 National Survey on Public Security perception."); id. at 141 (NACLA article describing the "pervasive government indifference toward violence against women in Mexico"); id. at 148 (Justice in Mexico article quoting a United Nations human rights representative saying that Mexico's lack of federal response to rising femicide rates reinforces a culture of gender-based violence and that "[i]mpunity is very high so you cannot see the deterrent effect of the [femicide] sanction").

Moreover, resources for women victims of domestic violence are inadequate, particularly in the state of Exhibit 6 at 5 ("According to . . . the Center for Women's Human Rights was one of the states with the highest numbers of enforced disappearances"), 26 ("State and municipal laws addressing domestic violence largely failed to meet the required federal standards and were often unenforced.”); Exhibit 13 at 45 (CEDAW Report stating that despite an extremely large case load of open investigations into crimes against women, [redacted] had dramatically insufficient staff and resources). Additionally, [redacted] was one of the last states to enact laws prohibiting femicide, and still has not enacted the warning system meant to prevent such murders before they occur. Exhibit 13 at 43, 46 (CEDAW Report stating that “[t]he State of [redacted] was the last to codify the crime of femicide,” and that [redacted] still “does not have an Alert for Gender-based Violence, although one exists on the federal level”); id. at 89 (UNHCR Report, “All of the women who said they reported persecution to the authorities in . . . Mexico stated that they received no protection or inadequate protection.”); id. at 134 (Vice News article stating, “[T]he lack of comprehensive data on women killings in Mexico is chronic. For example, [redacted] does not count women killings with extreme violence differently than other murders, as the state still lacks rules on the subject.”)

The Court also notes that although the police did not directly harm Lead Respondent in this case, police still regularly abuse women in Mexico. See Exhibit 6 at 10 (DOS Report listing cases of sexual exploitation of female prisoners throughout Mexico), 13 (detailing a 2006 incident where police took forty seven women into custody and sexually tortured them), 14 (reporting “widespread use of arbitrary detention by security forces”); Exhibit 13 at 88 (UNHCR Report recounting that “10 percent of the women interviewed stated that the police or other authorities were the direct source of their harm”); id. at 144-45 (NACLA article, “With the militarization of Mexican cities and the impunity encouraged by the political system, women have been targets of abductions, murder, disappearances, torture, arbitrary detention and criminalization in alarming numbers in the last three decades.”).

As abundant evidence in the Record reveals, despite recent advancements in legal protections, the de facto reality in Mexico still reflects a culture of discrimination and violence against women where police regularly fail or refuse to protect women, and even harm them directly. The Court cannot rely with blind faith on the existence of laws that protect women in name only while the evidence shows that officials continue to stand idly aside as women are abused and murdered with impunity. Thus, the Court finds that the Mexican government has proven unable or unwilling to protect Lead Respondent from [redacted] abuse.

2. Well-Founded Fear of Persecution

An asylum applicant who has suffered past persecution is presumed to have a well-founded fear of future persecution on the same grounds. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1). DHS may rebut this presumption by demonstrating either that there has been a fundamental change in circumstances such that the applicant no longer has a well-founded fear of persecution in her home country, or that the applicant could relocate to another part of the country to avoid future harm, and it would be reasonable to expect her to do so. 8 C.F.R. §§ 1208.13(b)(1)(i)(A)-(B); Matter of M-Z-M-R-, 26 I&N Dec. 28, 31 (BIA 2012). DHS bears the burden of rebutting this presumption by a preponderance of the evidence. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(3)(ii); Matter of D-I-M-, 24 I&N Dec. 448, 450 (BIA 2008).

As Lead Respondent has demonstrated that she suffered past persecution on account of her membership in the particular social group of Mexican women, she is entitled to a presumption of future persecution. To rebut this presumption, DHS presented only the DOS Mexico Human Rights Report. Exhibit 6. Indeed, the DOS Report describes efforts Mexico has made in recent years to protect women. Id. at 4 (noting the special prosecutor for violence against women opened ten cases as of [redacted], 26 (describing various state and federal laws Mexico has enacted to protect women). However, as described at length above, these laws have failed to mitigate violence against women, which remains ubiquitous throughout the country. See, e.g., Exhibit 13 at 148 (Justice in Mexico report stating that [redacted] had “the third highest number of femicides in Mexico’s recorded history”). Moreover, Lead Respondent has presented evidence that [redacted] has repeatedly attempted to contact her since she left Mexico. See Exhibit 13 at 10-23 (print-outs of [redacted] attempts to contact Respondent through Facebook). Though she last heard from [redacted] in [redacted], [redacted] also repeatedly tried to contact her through her family members. Lead Respondent also credibly testified that [redacted] attempted to enter the United States to find her. [redacted] brother-in-law warned Lead Respondent about [redacted] plans, and Immigration and Customs Enforcement informed Lead Respondent when it returned [redacted] to Mexico after he attempted to enter the United States. Thus, the Court concludes that DHS has failed to demonstrate a fundamental change in circumstances regarding either the general treatment of women throughout Mexico, or [redacted] specific plans to seek out and harm Lead Respondent.

DHS has presented no evidence regarding Lead Respondent’s ability to relocate internally, and the Court concludes that it would not be reasonable for her to do so. Lead Respondent left [redacted] and moved to a different city at least twice, and [redacted] found her and forced her to return with him on both occasions. [redacted] located Lead Respondent on these occasions because he knows where her family lives throughout Mexico. In fact, [redacted] managed to locate Lead Respondent in the United States, which indicates that he has the incentive to track her down even far from home. While Lead Respondent might be able to relocate to a part of Mexico where she has no family, the Court finds that it would not be reasonable to expect her to do so. First, Lead Respondent has only a high school education, and never held a successful job in Mexico. Second, she would have no one to help her with her four children, two of whom are United States citizens, if she was forced to live far from her family. Finally, Lead Respondent explained that [redacted] job as a truck driver means that he drives all over Mexico, and could search for her throughout the country. He used other people’s social media posts to locate her at least twice, and could likely do so again. Thus, the Court finds that Lead Respondent could not safely relocate within Mexico.

In sum, DHS has not rebutted the presumption that Lead Respondent has a well-founded fear of persecution upon return to Mexico.

D. Conclusion

et al.

Lead Respondent timely filed for asylum under the Act. Further, the Court found that she established through credible evidence that she suffered harm rising to the level of persecution on account of her membership in the particular social group of Mexican women by an individual that the government was unable and unwilling to control. DHS failed to rebut the resulting presumption that Lead Respondent has a well-founded fear of persecution upon her return to Mexico, as it failed to show changed circumstances or that she could safely relocate within Mexico. Thus, the Court finds Lead Respondent eligible for asylum under section 208 of the Act. The Court further finds Lead Respondent merits a favorable exercise of discretion, and will therefore grant her application. As the Court grants Lead Respondent's request for asylum, her daughters' derivative claims are also granted.

VI. Other Requested Relief

As the Court finds that Respondent is eligible for relief in the form of asylum under section 208 of the Act, it declines to analyze her eligibility for withholding of removal under section 241(b)(3) of the Act, and protection under the CAT.

Accordingly, the Court will enter the following orders:

ORDERS

IT IS ORDERED that Respondents' applications for asylum pursuant to section 208 of the Act are GRANTED.

It is FURTHER ORDERED that Respondent's minor daughters, riders in this proceeding, shall be granted derivative relief pursuant to section 208 of the Act.

IT IS FURTHER ORDERED that appeal is RESERVED on behalf of both parties.

DECISION OF THE IMMIGRATION JUDGE

I. PROCEDURAL HISTORY

On December 13, 2017, the Department of Homeland Security ("DHS") initiated these removal proceedings against Respondent, _____, by filing a Notice to Appear ("NTA") with the San Francisco, California, Immigration Court. Exh. 1. The NTA alleges that Respondent is a native and citizen of Mexico, who applied for admission into the United States at the Nogales, Arizona, Port of Entry on July 10, 2017, and did not then possess or present a valid immigrant visa, reentry permit, border crossing identification card, or other valid entry document. Id. Based on these allegations, DHS charged Respondent with removability under the Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA" or "Act") § 212(a)(7)(A)(i)(I), as amended, as an immigrant who, at the time of application for admission, was not in possession of a valid unexpired immigrant visa, reentry permit, border crossing card, or other valid entry document as required by the Act. Id.

On _____, Respondent admitted the factual allegations in the NTA and conceded the charge of removability but declined to designate a country of removal. Based on her admissions and concession, the Court sustained the charge of removability and directed Mexico as the country of removal, should removal become necessary. 8 C.F.R. § 1240.10(c), (f). On 2018, Respondent filed a Form I-589, Application for Asylum and for Withholding of Removal ("Form I-589"), applying for asylum, withholding of removal, and protection under the Convention Against Torture ("CAT"). Exh. 3A.

II. EVIDENCE PRESENTED

The Court has thoroughly reviewed the evidence in the record, even if not explicitly mentioned in this decision. The evidence of record consists of the testimony of Respondent and the following exhibits:

- Exhibit 1: NTA;
- Exhibit 2: Form I-213, Record of Deportable/Inadmissible Alien;
- Exhibit 3: Letters in support of Respondent's Form I-589;
- Exhibit 3A: Form I-589;
- Exhibit 4: 2016 United States Department of State Human Rights Report for Mexico;
- Exhibit 5: Respondent's documentation in support of her Form I-589;
- Exhibit 6: Respondent's amendments to her Form I-589;
- Exhibit 7: Respondent's supplemental documentation;
- Exhibit 8: Respondent's additional supplemental documentation; and
- Exhibit 9: Respondent's additional supplemental documentation.

A. Respondent's Testimony and Declaration

Respondent testified before the Court on August 23, 2018, and submitted two declarations in support of her applications for relief. Exhs. 5 at Tab B, 9 at Tab B. The Court summarizes Respondent's testimony and declarations together below.

1. Background.

Respondent was born on _____, in _____ Mexico. She grew up in Morelos, Mexico with her parents and five siblings. Respondent studied art education and worked as a teacher.

2. Abuse by: _____

From the age of 5, until the age of 22, Respondent's mother, _____, physically and mentally abused Respondent on a daily basis. Beginning when Respondent was approximately five years old, her mother forced her to complete the duties of a servant, including sweeping, mopping, and washing clothing, to teach Respondent how to be a good housewife. Respondent testified that her mother also beat her to make her strong and to prepare her to be a good wife, teaching her how to tolerate a beating by her future husband. She beat Respondent with a belt, cables from a washing machine, a broomstick, and a kitchen spoon. On one occasion, when Respondent told her father about the abuse, Respondent's mother beat her so severely that she was unable to sit or leave her bed the following day. Respondent also testified that her mother taught her that women always needed to obey their husbands and that once Respondent was married, Respondent would need to ask him for permission to do anything because he was in charge. She also taught Respondent that the husband is the "superior being who can do no wrong," and if a husband beats his wife, it is her fault.

Respondent also testified that when she was nine or ten years old, she was raped during a robbery of her family's home. She told her mother who committed the robbery but not that she was raped; her mother called her a "liar and blamed [Respondent] for not alerting her to the robbery."

3. Abuse by

In 1989, Respondent met her husband, _____ ("Mr. B _____"). They married in _____ Mexico on _____, 1993. They have one child, _____ ("Ms. R. _____"), born on _____, 1993.

Approximately three months after they married, Mr. B _____ began consistently beating Respondent. On the first occasion, while on a trip to the United States, he slapped her twice across the face and punched her mouth, breaking her two front teeth. When they returned to Mexico, Mr. B _____ continued to abuse her, often after consuming alcohol. Respondent testified that Mr. B _____ abused her because "he felt wounded in his machismo" and told her "you're not going to step on me. I'm the man and you're going to do what I say." She believes he beat her because she was a woman and believed that she was his equal with a right to her own opinions and ideas.

Respondent also testified that on two occasions, Mr. B _____ burned her with cigarettes, leaving permanent scars. During the first incident, in the middle of the night, Mr. B _____ burned Respondent's arm with a cigarette while she slept, demanding that she cook for him. She refused, but he insisted that she must cook for him because it was her job. He dragged her by her hair to the kitchen, stating, "A woman's only job was to shut up and obey her husband." Respondent continued to refuse to cook for him, and in response, Mr. B _____ slapped her. In the second incident, Mr. B _____ burned Respondent's face with a cigarette because she continued to work, despite his orders to quit her job, thus, explicitly disobeying Mr. B _____ and continuing to express that she had a right to work. Respondent testified that he burned her to show her that they were not equals, he was in charge, and to impress these principles upon her since he believed she did not understand them.

Eventually, Respondent quit her job. However, Mr. B _____ abandoned her approximately six months after they married; Respondent and her daughter lived with Respondent's family. Mr. B _____ and Respondent remain married because Respondent's family is Catholic, and her family would disown her if they divorced.

4. Abuse by

In January 1995, Respondent entered the United States and began living in Phoenix, Arizona. Approximately two months later, she met _____ ("Mr. H _____"), and they began a relationship in May 1995. They have three United States citizen children together, born [redacted] 1996, born [redacted] 1997, and [redacted] born [redacted] 2004. Shortly after beginning their relationship, Respondent and Mr. H began living together, and Mr. H beat Respondent for the first time because he believed she was having an affair with his friend. However, he did not harm Respondent again until approximately two years later.

Respondent testified that from approximately 1998 until 2016, Mr. H consistently abused her; he also used drugs and abused alcohol often. He beat, raped, and strangled her over the course of their relationship. Mr. H raped her approximately five times per month and beat her approximately three times per month. Respondent testified that she bears physical scars from multiple incidents of his abuse. On one occasion, when Respondent refused to give Mr. H money or sex, he hit her, broke a beer bottle, cut her leg with the bottle, and then raped her. On other occasions when Respondent rejected his sexual advances, Mr. H stated that Respondent was "his woman and had to have sex with him whenever he wanted" before raping Respondent. Mr. H stated that Respondent needed to have sex with him whenever he wanted because she was a woman and thus, "his slave" and required to obey him. On another occasion, in 2004, Respondent entered their home and told Mr. H that his friends should leave. Mr. H warned Respondent that she was not to speak when entering the room and beat Respondent so severely she had a vaginal hemorrhage.

Mr. H often ordered Respondent to quit her job and beat her when he was jealous of her male supervisors. He also demanded she only work with other women and dress as he desired. Respondent testified that when she wore an outfit Mr. H did not approve of, he ripped it off of her. Mr. H also frequently bit Respondent, leaving marks on her neck and arms to show that she was "[his] woman" because others "need[ed] to know it." Respondent also testified that if she resisted due to her belief that they were equal partners, Mr. H harmed her.

Respondent attempted to end her relationship with Mr. H numerous times; however, he refused to leave and would beat and rape her to emphasize his refusal. She believed he mistreated her because she was the mother of his children and he believed he had the power and could do whatever he wanted. In 2015, Respondent moved into a house without Mr. H. Yet, Mr. H found opportunities to physically harm Respondent, often utilizing their children to have contact with her.

In the spring of 2017, Mr. H was removed to his native Guatemala. Shortly thereafter, Respondent was subsequently removed to Mexico, and she returned to her parents' home. She fled Mexico approximately two weeks later because she received menacing phone calls from Mr. H.

5. Criminal History

In 2007, Respondent was arrested for criminal impersonation. She testified that when she went to the Department of Motor Vehicles to renew her Arizona identification, the clerk informed her that a social security number was required for the renewal application. When Respondent expressed that she did not have a social security number, the clerk threatened to call the police; Respondent became fearful and wrote down a random number. She was ultimately convicted and sentenced to one year of probation.

6. Fear of Returning to Mexico

Respondent fears that if she returns to Mexico, she will be persecuted by both Mr. B and Mr. H.

Respondent testified that approximately two years ago, Mr. B called her requesting information regarding her whereabouts. He expressed his desire to rekindle their relationship, but Respondent refused and told him to leave her alone. Thereafter, Respondent changed her phone number. However, Mr. B continued to contact Respondent through Facebook messages, again seeking information on her whereabouts. Respondent deleted her account to prevent Mr. B from contacting her. Yet, Respondent testified that she heard from her daughter that Mr. B visited her and was aggressive; he threatened to take "revenge" against Respondent for rejecting him and having relationships with other men.

Respondent testified that approximately one week after she was removed to Mexico, Mr. H called her on her cell phone and told Respondent he planned to locate her. Respondent believes Mr. H could find her in Mexico because his entire family resides in Chiapas, Mexico. During a second phone call, Mr. H stated that he already confirmed that Respondent was residing at her parents' home in Mexico, and he would be "coming for [Respondent]." Despite Respondent's repeated pleas to Mr. H to leave her alone, he continued to attempt to acquire information about Respondent's whereabouts through their children. She fled to the United States after she continued to feel fear and distress from Mr. H's menacing phone calls. Respondent testified that if Mr. H harmed her in Mexico she would attempt to report him to the police, but she did not believe they would help her. She believed that he would be able to locate her through their children.

B. Documentary Evidence

Respondent submitted a copy of her marriage certificate to the Court. Exh. 9 at 1. Respondent also submitted her psychological evaluation by Dr. Jane Christmas, a licensed clinical psychologist; Dr. Christmas diagnosed Respondent with post-traumatic stress disorder and major depressive disorder. Id. at 7-24. Respondent also submitted letters of support from community members. See Exh. 3.

Respondent submitted declarations from her daughter, Ms. R, and her son, , in which they described the abuse Respondent suffered by both of their fathers. Exh. 5 at 20-25. stated that Mr. H called him after Respondent was removed to Mexico seeking information on her location. Id. at 21. Ms. R stated that Mr. B is very aggressive and angry with Respondent because she had a relationship with another man. Id. at 23. She also stated that both Mr. B and Mr. H are seeking information on Respondent's whereabouts. Id. at 23-24. Respondent also submitted a copy of text messages Mr. H sent to Ms. R seeking information regarding Respondent's location. Id.

at 39. The record also includes photographic evidence of the injuries Respondent sustained from the abuse by Mr. H . Id. at 29–38.

Respondent submitted a letter from Adriana Prieto-Mendoza, a Mexican attorney; Ms. Prieto-Mendoza stated that Mr. H would be able to obtain permanent residency in Mexico because his children with Respondent are Mexican citizens and included copies of Mexican law to support her statement. Exh. 7 at 30–54.

Finally, Respondent submitted documentation of her criminal convictions. Id. at Tab A. The record evinces that in 2007, Respondent was convicted of criminal impersonation and was sentenced to one year of probation, and she was convicted of shoplifting and sentenced to pay a fine. Id. at 3–25. In 2017, Respondent was convicted for illegal entry in violation of 8 U.S.C. § 1325(a)(2) and sentenced to 150 days of confinement. Id. at 27–29.

C. Country Conditions Evidence

Respondent submitted extensive documentary evidence regarding country conditions in Mexico. See Exhs. 5 at Tabs G–OO, 7 Tabs D–M. DHS also submitted country conditions evidence. Exh. 4. The Court has comprehensively reviewed all country conditions evidence in the record and discusses the relevant information in the analysis below.

III. ANALYSIS

A. Credibility

A respondent has the burden of proof to establish she is eligible for relief, which she may establish through credible testimony. See INA § 240(c)(4). In making a credibility finding under the REAL ID Act, the Court may base its credibility determination on the demeanor, candor, or responsiveness of the applicant; the inherent plausibility of her account; the consistency between her written and oral statements; the internal consistency of each such statement; the internal consistency of such statements with other evidence of record; any inaccuracies or falsehoods in such statements; or any other relevant factor. Id.

The Court analyzed Respondent's testimony for consistency, detail, specificity, and persuasiveness. Overall, Respondent testified in a consistent, believable, and forthright manner, and DHS conceded that Respondent was credible. Considering the totality of the circumstances, the Court finds that Respondent testified credibly and accords her testimony full evidentiary weight. Id.

B. Asylum

To qualify for a grant of asylum, an applicant bears the burden of demonstrating that she meets the statutory definition of a refugee. INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i). The Act defines the term "refugee" as any person who is outside her country of nationality who is unable or unwilling to return to, and is unable or unwilling to avail herself of the protection of that country because of past persecution or a well-founded fear of future persecution on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. INA § 101(a)(42)(A).

Respondent argues she is eligible for asylum relief based on the past persecution she suffered at the hands of her mother and her husband and based on an independent well-founded fear of harm by her ex-partner.¹ The Court analyzes Respondent's claims for relief below.

I. Past Persecution

To establish past persecution, an applicant must show that she experienced harm that (1) rises to the level of persecution, (2) was on account of a protected ground, and (3) was committed by the government or forces the government is unable or unwilling to control. Navas v. INS, 217 F.3d 646, 655-56 (9th Cir. 2000).

a. Harm Rising to the Level Necessary to Establish Persecution

"Persecution" is "the infliction of suffering or harm upon those who differ . . . in a way regarded as offensive." Sangha v. INS, 103 F.3d 1482, 1487 (9th Cir. 1997). Physical violence, such as rape, torture, assault, and beatings, "has consistently been treated as persecution." Chand v. INS, 222 F.3d 1066, 1073 (9th Cir. 2000). In assessing whether an applicant has suffered past persecution, the Court may not consider each individual incident in isolation but must instead evaluate the cumulative effect of the abuse the applicant suffered. See Krótova v. Gonzales, 416 F.3d 1080, 1084 (9th Cir. 2005).

While living in Mexico, Respondent experienced harm by her mother and her husband, Mr. B . . . See Exhs. 5 at Tab B, 9. The Court addresses the harm Respondent suffered by each in turn.

As an initial matter, the Court notes that Respondent was a child at the time of the harm she suffered by her mother, and "age can be a critical factor in the adjudication of asylum claims and may bear heavily on the question of whether an applicant was persecuted . . ." Hernandez-Ortiz v. Gonzales, 496 F.3d 1042, 1045 (9th Cir. 2007) (internal quotation marks omitted). The Court must assess the alleged persecution from the child's perspective, as the "harm a child fears or has suffered . . . may be relatively less than that of an adult and still qualify as persecution." Id. By its common usage, "child abuse" encompasses "any form of cruelty to a child's physical, moral, or mental well-being." Matter of Rodriguez-Rodriguez, 22 I&N Dec. 991, 996 (BIA 1999) (internal quotation marks omitted); see also Veltizquez-Herrera v. Gonzales, 446 F.3d 781, 782 (9th Cir. 2006). From the age of 5 until the age of 22, Respondent's mother physically harmed Respondent on a daily basis. She beat Respondent with a belt, cables from a washing machine, a broomstick, and a kitchen spoon. On one occasion, Respondent's mother beat her so severely that she was unable to sit or leave her bed the following day. In addition, Respondent's mother forced her to perform all of the duties of a servant at home, which imposed psychological harm upon Respondent. Considered cumulatively, the Court finds that the physical and mental abuse of Respondent by her mother constitutes harm rising to the level of persecution. See Krotova, 416 F.3d at 1084; Chand, 222 F.3d at 1073.

Next, the Court considers the harm Respondent suffered by her husband, Mr. B. Respondent testified that after they married, Mr. B. consistently physically and psychologically abused Respondent during their marriage. He frequently beat her, pulled her hair, slapped her, and on two occasions, burned her with a cigarette, once on her face, leaving permanent scars. He abused her for months before he left her and moved away. The Court finds the harm Respondent suffered by Mr. B. rises to the level of persecution. See Krotova, 416 F.3d at 1084; Chand, 222 F.3d at 1073.

b. On Account of a Protected Ground

In addition to showing harm rising to the level of persecution, an applicant must show that the persecution was on account of one or more of the protected grounds enumerated in the Act: race, religion, nationality, political opinion, or membership in a particular social group. INA § 101(a)(42)(A); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1).

Respondent asserts that she was persecuted on account of her membership in numerous particular social groups,² including “women in Mexico.” The Court understands Respondent’s proposed social group to constitute the particular social group “Mexican females.” Accordingly, the Court adopts this refined formulation of the particular social group and addresses each of the three requirements to determine the group’s cognizability under the INA below. Respondent also asserts that she was harmed on account of her political opinions, including: (1) that women have the right to pursue a career; (2) men and women have equal rights; and (3) husbands and wives have equal status. The Court understands each of these three political opinions to constitute a feminist political opinion and analyzes the protected ground as such. The Court analyzes each protected ground in turn.

i. Particular Social Group

A “particular social group” must be (1) composed of members who share a common immutable characteristic; (2) defined with particularity; and (3) socially distinct within the society in question. See Matter of A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. 316, 319 (AG 2018) (citing Matter of M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. 227, 237 (BIA 2014)). “To be cognizable, a particular social group must ‘exist independently’ of the harm asserted in an application for asylum or statutory withholding of removal.” Id. (quoting M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 236 n.11, 243). The Board of Immigration Appeals (“Board”) stated that “[s]ocial groups based on innate characteristics such as sex or family relationship are generally easily recognizable and understood by others to constitute social groups.” Matter of C-A-, 23 I&N Dec. 951, 959 (BIA 2006); see Matter of Acosta, 19

² Respondent proposed additional particular social groups related to her claim for past persecution including: (1) “direct descendants of _____”; (2) “female children of _____”; (3) “women and girls in Mexico;” and (4) “married women in Mexico.” Further, Respondent also proposed additional particular social groups for her claim of well-founded fear of persecution including: (5) “married women in Mexico who are unable to leave their relationship;” (6) “mothers of the children of _____;” and (7) “women in Mexico who are unable to leave their relationship with the father of their children.” However, the Court does not address their cognizability at this time.

I&N Dec. 211, 233 (BIA 1985).

First, common and immutable characteristics are those attributes that members of the group "either cannot change, or should not be required to change because it is fundamental to their individual identities or consciences." Acosta, 19 I&N Dec. at 233 (listing sex, color, kinship, and shared past experiences as prototypical examples of an immutable characteristic). Respondent's social group, "Mexican females," satisfies the immutability requirement because it is defined by gender and nationality, two innate characteristics that are fundamental to an individual's identity. Id.; see also Perdomo v. Holder, 611 F.3d 662, 667 (9th Cir. 2010) (reiterating that "women in a particular country, regardless of ethnicity or clan membership, could form a particular social group"); Mohammed v. Gonzales, 400 F.3d 785, 797 (9th Cir. 2005) ("[G]irls or women of a particular clan or nationality (or even in some circumstances females in general) may constitute a social group . . .").

Second, to be cognizable, the proposed social groups must be sufficiently particular. M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 239 ("A particular social group must be defined by characteristics that provide a clear benchmark for determining who falls within the group.") (citation omitted); see also Henríquez-Rivas v. Holder, 707 F.3d 1081, 1091 (9th Cir. 2013) (en banc). The "particularity" requirement addresses the outer limits of the group's boundaries and requires a determination as to whether the group is sufficiently discrete without being "amorphous, overbroad, diffuse, or subjective;" "not every 'immutable characteristic' is sufficiently precise to define a particular social group." A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 335 (quoting M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 239). Here, the group is sufficiently particular because the membership is limited to a discrete section of Mexican society—female citizens of Mexico—and is thus distinguishable from the rest of society. See Perdomo, 611 F.3d at 667, 669 (rejecting the notion that a persecuted group could represent too large a portion of the population to constitute a particular social group); M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 239.

Finally, Respondent must demonstrate that the group is socially distinct within Mexico. To establish social distinction, an applicant must show that members of the social group are "set apart, or distinct, from other persons within the society in some significant way," M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 238, and that they are "perceived as a group by society." Matter of W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. 208, 216 (BIA 2014) (emphasis in original). The Board clarified that "a group's recognition for asylum purposes is determined by the perception of the society in question, rather than by the perception of the persecutor." A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 330 (quoting M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 242). Legislation passed to protect a specific group can be evidence that the society in question views members of the particular group as distinct. See Henríquez-Rivas, 707 F.3d at 1092. Yet, "a social group may not be defined exclusively by the fact that its members have been subjected to harm." A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 331 (citing M-E-V-G-, 26 I&N Dec. at 238). "[S]ocial groups must be classes recognizable by society at large" rather than "a victim of a particular abuser in highly individualized circumstances." Id. at 336 (citing W-G-R-, 26 I&N Dec. at 217 (providing that "[t]o have the 'social distinction' necessary to establish a particular social group, there must be evidence showing that society in general perceives, considers, or recognizes persons sharing the particular characteristic to be a group"))).

The Court finds the evidence in the record demonstrates that Mexican society views members of the particular social group “Mexican females” to be distinct. See id. Notably, country conditions documentation in the record evinces that violence committed against Mexican females is “pandemic,” including femicide and domestic violence. Exh. 5 at 80, 255, 280. The 2017 United States Department of State Human Rights Report for Mexico (“2017 HR Report”) identified that federal law criminalizes femicide and rape, however, impunity for all crimes remained high. Id. at 42, 67. Indeed, Respondent’s home state of Morelos is tied for the highest number of rape and femicides. Exh. 7 at 73. Furthermore, in 2015 and 2016, the federal government began utilizing a “gender alert” mechanism to direct local authorities to “take immediate action to combat violence against women by granting victims legal, health, and psychological services and speeding investigations of unsolved cases.” Exh. 5 at 100. The government issued a “gender alert” for Morelos, and a federal agency worked to set in place measures for the security and prevention of violence for women. Id.; Exh. 7 at 83. The existence of these efforts demonstrates the government’s recognition of the need for specialized protection for Mexican females and, thus, that Mexican females are viewed as a distinct group from the general population in Mexico. See Henriquez-Rivas, 707 F.3d at 1092; Silvestre-Mendoza v. Sessions, No. 15-71961, 2018 WL 3237505 (9th Cir. July 3, 2018) (unpublished) (the Ninth Circuit remanded to the BIA to consider whether “Guatemalan women” constituted a particular social group because the record appeared to support that it may be “socially distinct”).³

Accordingly, the Court finds that Respondent’s particular social group “Mexican females” is cognizable under the Act. Furthermore, the Court finds that Respondent is a member of the particular social group.

ii. Particular Social Group Nexus

“Applicants must also show that their membership in the particular social group was a central reason for their persecution.” A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 319; INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i). A “central reason” is a “reason of primary importance to the persecutors, one that is essential to their decision to act. In other words, a motive is a ‘central reason’ if the persecutor would not have harmed the applicant if such motive did not exist.” Parussimova v. Mikasey, 555 F.3d 734, 741 (9th Cir. 2008). The applicant may provide either direct or circumstantial evidence to establish that the persecutor was or would be motivated by the applicant’s actual or imputed status or belief. See INS v. Elias-Zacarias, 502 U.S. 478, 483 (1992). Proof of motivation may consist of statements made by the persecutor to the victim. See Sinha v. Holder, 564 F. 3d 1015, 1021–22 (9th Cir. 2009) (providing that attackers’ abusive language showed they were motivated at least in part by a protected ground).

Here, Respondent provided sufficient direct and circumstantial evidence to establish that her membership in the social group of “Mexican females” was at least one central reason for the persecution she suffered by her mother and her husband. Although Respondent’s mother is also a member of the particular social group “Mexican females,” a person may be persecuted by members of her own social group. As the Ninth Circuit explained, “[t]hat a person shares an identity with a persecutor does not . . . foreclose a claim of persecution on account of a protected ground.” Maini v. INS, 212 F.3d 1167, 1175 (9th Cir. 2000). Respondent’s mother consistently beat her, reasoning she was preparing Respondent for her life with her future husband. Exh. 5 at 5. She told Respondent that women needed to obey their husbands, and she beat Respondent because Respondent was female and needed to prepare to be a good wife. Id. at 4. Viewing the evidence of record in its totality, and, in particular, her mother's statements, the Court finds that Respondent's membership in her particular social group was at least "one central reason" for her persecution by her mother. INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i); Parussimova, 555 F.3d at 741.

Similarly, Respondent testified that Mr. B frequently abused her because she was a Mexican woman. On one occasion, he awoke Respondent in the middle of the night, intentionally burned her with a cigarette, and demanded that she cook him food, dragging her by the hair to the kitchen and stating that "a woman's only job was to shut up and obey her husband." Exh. 5 at 5. During another occasion of abuse, Mr. B threw Respondent to the floor and said, "You're not going to step on me. I'm the man and you're going to do what I say." Id. The record supports that many individuals in Mexico have an endemic perception that women are inferior to men. See generally id. The record also includes the declaration of Nancy K. D. Lemon, an expert on domestic violence, in which she opined "gender is one of the main motivating factors, if not the primary factor, for domestic violence. In other words, the socially or culturally constructed and defined identities, roles, and responsibility that are assigned to women, as distinct from those assigned to men, are at the root of domestic violence." Id. at 118. In particular, Mr. B's statements in the context of Mexican society are strong evidence that if Respondent were not a woman, he would not have harmed her in this manner. Further, a report from Mexico's interior department, the National Women's Institute, and UN Women stated, "Violence against women and girls . . . is perpetrated, in most cases, to conserve and reproduce the submission and subordination of them derived from relationships of power." Id. at 253. As such, in the totality of the circumstances, the Court finds that Respondent's membership in the particular social group "Mexican females" was "at least one central reason" for her persecution by Mr. B. INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i); Parussimova, 555 F.3d at 741.

iii. Political Opinion

To establish that past persecution is on account of political opinion, an asylum applicant must meet two requirements. First, the applicant must demonstrate that she held, or that her persecutors believed she held, a political opinion. Ahmed v. Keisler, 504 F.3d 1183, 1192 (9th Cir. 2007). Second, the applicant must show that she was persecuted "because of" this actual or imputed political opinion. Id. The Ninth Circuit held that "[a] political opinion encompasses more than electoral politics or formal political ideology or action." Id. The factual circumstances of the case alone may at times be sufficient to demonstrate that the persecution was committed on account of a political opinion. Navas, 217 F.3d at 657.

Respondent asserts that Mr. B and her mother also persecuted her on account of her feminist political opinion. Respondent expressed her belief in the equality of men and women, including equality in opinions, worth, and support; she also believes that as a woman, she has the right to work. The Court finds Respondent's views constitute a political opinion. See Ahmed, 504 F.3d at 1192; see also Fatim v. INS, 12 F.3d 1233, 1242 (3d Cir. 1993) (stating there is "little doubt that feminism qualifies as a political opinion within the meaning of the relevant statutes").

Next, the Court considers whether Respondent's political opinion was one central reason for the persecution she suffered by her mother and Mr. B . See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i); Navas, 217 F.3d at 656. Respondent testified that her mother abused her to teach her that women needed to obey their husbands and that husbands were in charge. Respondent also testified that her mother admitted to physically abusing Respondent because she would "answer back." The record indicates that Respondent's mother was not primarily motivated to harm Respondent because of her political opinion. See Parussimova, 555 F.3d at 741. Therefore, the Court finds that Respondent's political opinion was not one central reason for the persecution she suffered by her mother. See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i). However, the Court finds that Respondent's feminist political opinion was "a reason" for the persecution because Respondent's mother disagreed with Respondent's political opinion and abused Respondent, in part, for disagreeing with her. See INA § 241(b)(3)(A); see Barajas-Romero v. Lynch, 846 F.3d 351, 360 (9th Cir. 2017) (nexus standard for withholding of removal is the protected ground must have been "a reason" for the persecution).

However, the evidence in the record demonstrates that Respondent's feminist political opinion was one central reason for the persecution by Mr. B . Respondent testified that Mr. B burned her with a cigarette because she refused to quit her job and disobeyed his instruction to quit. Mr. B also burned her face with a cigarette to show her that they were not equals, he was in charge, and to impress these principles upon her since he believed she did not understand them. She also testified that he beat her because she believed she had the right to her own opinions and ideas; specifically, Mr. B beat her when she expressed her opinion that she had a right to work or she refused to cook for him. Based on Mr. B's actions and statements, the Court finds that Respondent's political opinion was at least one central reason for the persecution by Mr. B . See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i); Parussimova, 555 F.3d at 741. Therefore, the Court finds that Mr. B persecuted Respondent on account of her feminist political opinion. See Ahmed, 504 F.3d at 1192.

c. Government Unable or Unwilling to Control Persecutor

Finally, the applicant must demonstrate that the persecution she experienced was inflicted by the government or forces the government was unable or unwilling to control. Navas, 217 F.3d at 655-56. Prior unheeded requests for authorities' assistance or showing that a country's laws or customs deprive victims of meaningful recourse to protection may establish governmental inability or unwillingness to protect. See Bringas-Rodriguez v. Sessions, 850 F.3d 1051, 1073-74 (9th Cir. 2017) (en banc) (providing that where "ample evidence demonstrates that reporting [persecution to police] would have been futile and dangerous," applicants are not required to report their persecutors"); Afriyie v. Holder, 613 F.3d 924, 931 (9th Cir. 2010) (holding that "the authorities' response (or lack thereof)" to reports of persecution provides "powerful evidence with respect to the government's willingness or ability to protect" the applicant and noting that authorities' willingness to take a report does not establish they can provide protection). Yet, applicants "must show not just that the crime has gone unpunished, but that the government is unwilling or unable to prevent it." A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 338. The Ninth Circuit also recognizes that there are significant barriers for children to report abuse. Bringas-Rodriguez, 850 F.3d at 1071.

Respondent testified that she did not report the abuse she suffered by her mother or Mr. B to the police because she believed it would be futile and that the police would not help her. See id. at 1073–74. Specifically, Respondent mentioned a friend who reported severe abuse by her husband to the police; however, the police merely told Respondent’s friend to “stop gossiping,” instructed Respondent’s friend to return to her house to do her “duties,” and blamed Respondent’s friend for the abuse because she was not doing her chores. See Afrlyie, 613 F.3d at 931.

The country conditions evidence in the record overwhelmingly establishes that any efforts by Respondent to report the abuse by Mr. B would have been futile. Although “[t]he fact that the local police have not acted on a particular report of an individual crime does not necessarily mean that the government is unwilling or unable to control crime,” here, the record supports Respondent’s testimony and indicates that the Mexican government is unable or unwilling to control Respondent’s persecutors. A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 337. The 2017 HR Report states that impunity for human rights abuses in Mexico remained a problem, “with extremely low rates of prosecution for all forms of crimes.” Exh. 5 at 42. Morelos, Respondent’s home state, has the fourth highest murder rate in the country and ranks in the top two for rape. Exh. 7 at 94. Relatedly, police and military were involved in serious human rights abuses and benefitted from the trend of impunity. Exh. 5 at 80, 88. A 2016 report found that nearly one in ten of Mexico’s police officers are unfit for service, and the country faces serious issues of police corruption on both the federal and local level with federal counter corruption efforts continually failing. Id. at 308, 312–17.

Furthermore, “Mexican laws do not adequately protect women and girls against domestic and sexual violence.” Id. at 269. Although federal laws address domestic violence, federal law does not criminalize spousal abuse, and the “[s]tate and municipal laws addressing domestic violence largely failed to meet the required federal standards and often were unenforced.” Id. at 67. Violence against women and domestic violence continue to be some of the most serious human rights abuses in Mexico, with approximately two-thirds of women in Mexico having experienced gender-based violence during their lives. Id. at 80, 198. Although the federal government has issued some “gender alerts” to focus efforts on assisting women victims of domestic violence, there has not yet been a noticeable impact. Id. at 101, 202. In addition, often, domestic violence victims did not report abuses due to fear of spousal reprisal, stigma, and societal beliefs that abuse did not merit a complaint. Id. at 100.

Additionally, in protective services, including police services, bias against women leads to inadequate investigations of abuse, resulting in impunity for abusers. Id. at 185–86, 202. In fact, investigations regarding femicide cases revealed that 70% of femicides were committed by intimate partners, and “the majority of [victims] had sought help from government authorities, but that nothing had been done because this type of violence was considered to be a private matter.” Id. at 187; see also id. at 297. Further, the Mexican government admitted its role in gender issues in the country, citing their “culture deeply rooted in stereotypes, based on the underlying assumption that women are inferior.” Id. at 187–88. There “has not been success in changing the cultural patterns that devalue women and consider them disposable.” Id. at 251.

Finally, despite efforts on the federal level to combat gendered violence, criminal investigations continue to be ineffective. See id. at 192. A common response from police is to not take a report of abuse seriously, similar to the response experienced by Respondent's friend. Id. Common responses by police include attempts to convince women not to file a complaint, or in the case where authorities do respond, they negotiate a "reconciliation" between the victim and the abuser. Id. Police treat domestic violence reporting as though it was the "normal state of affairs." Id. at 258 (internal quotation marks omitted). In addition, Mexican law enforcement authorities are not equipped to respond quickly or to effectively enforce protective orders. Id. at 193. The record indicates that "cases of violence against women are not properly investigated, adjudicated or sanctioned." Id. at 257.

In light of the evidence in the record, the Court finds that Respondent has shown that reporting the persecution to the authorities would have been futile or would have subjected her to further abuse. See Bringas-Rodriguez, 850 F.3d at 1073-74. Thus, the Court finds that Respondent met her burden to show that the government either condoned the actions of private actors or demonstrated a complete helplessness to protect victims like Respondent. See A-B, 27 I&N Dec. at 337.

Although the Attorney General stated in A-B that "[g]enerally, claims by aliens pertaining to domestic violence . . . perpetrated by non-governmental actors will not qualify for asylum," the Attorney General did not foreclose this possibility, and the Court finds that in this particular case, Respondent established that she was persecuted on account of her membership in the particular social group "Mexican females" and her feminist political opinion by actors the Mexican government was unable or unwilling to control. A-B, 27 I&N Dec. at 320; see INA § 101(a)(42)(A); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b).

2. Well-Founded Fear of Future Persecution

Because Respondent has demonstrated that she suffered past persecution in Mexico on account of a protected ground by actors that the government is unable or unwilling to control, she is entitled to a presumption that she has a well-founded fear of future persecution. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1). DHS may overcome this presumption by showing, by a preponderance of the evidence, that (1) there has been a fundamental change in circumstances such that Respondent no longer has a well-founded fear of persecution in Mexico, or (2) Respondent could avoid future persecution by relocating to another part of the country. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1)(i).

a. Fundamental Change in Circumstances

The evidence indicates that Respondent no longer has a well-founded fear of persecution by her mother on account of her particular social group of "Mexican females." Respondent's mother abused her during the time she resided at home with her parents. Now, however, Respondent is no longer a child and does not live in her parents' home. Given these facts, Respondent's circumstances have fundamentally changed such that her mother does not remain a danger to her, and the Court finds that Respondent no longer has a well-founded fear of persecution by her mother on account of a protected ground. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1)(i)(A).

However, Mr. B has continued to contact and harass Respondent, including as recently as two years ago. Mr. B and Respondent's daughter, Ms. R, stated in her declaration that her father continues to ask about Respondent and is angry because Respondent was in a relationship with another man. Exh. 5 at 23. DHS did not present evidence to indicate a fundamental change in circumstances regarding Mr. B. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1)(ii). Therefore, the Court concludes that DHS failed to meet its burden to show that there has been a fundamental change in circumstances such that Respondent no longer has a well-founded fear of persecution by Mr. B on account of a protected ground. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1)(i)(A).

b. Internal Relocation

In a case in which the applicant has demonstrated past persecution, DHS bears the burden of proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the applicant could avoid future persecution by relocating to another part of the applicant's country of nationality and it would be reasonable to expect the applicant to do so. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1)(ii); see also A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 344-45 (The Court "must consider, consistent with the regulations, whether internal relocation in [the applicant's] home country presents a reasonable alternative before granting asylum."). Generalized information about country conditions is not sufficient to rebut the presumption of a well-founded fear of future persecution. Molina-Estrada v. INS, 293 F.3d 1089, 1096 (9th Cir. 2002). Rather, DHS must introduce evidence that rebuts the applicant's specific grounds for fearing future persecution on an individualized basis. Id.

Here, Respondent testified that her entire family lives on the same piece of land as her parents' home. In addition, Respondent remains married to Mr. B. As recently as two years ago, Mr. B called Respondent seeking information regarding her location; he expressed that he wanted her to live with him again. She refused and changed her phone number. However, Mr. B continued to send her messages through Facebook asking about her whereabouts. Further, DHS has not introduced individualized evidence demonstrating that Respondent could avoid future persecution by relocating to another part of the country. See Gonzales-Hernandez v. Ashcroft, 336 F.3d 995, 997-98 (9th Cir. 2003) (holding that the government must introduce evidence that, on an individualized basis, rebuts the applicant's specific grounds for fearing future persecution). Accordingly, the Court finds that DHS failed to meet its burden to show that Respondent could relocate within Mexico and thus, DHS failed to rebut Respondent's presumption of a well-founded fear of future persecution by Mr. B both on account of her particular social group membership and her political opinion. Id.; 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1)(ii). Therefore, the Court finds Respondent is statutorily eligible for asylum. See INA § 208(b)(1)(A).

c. Independent Well-Founded Fear

In the alternative, even in the absence of past persecution, an applicant may be eligible for asylum based on a well-founded fear of future persecution. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(1). An applicant has a well-founded fear of persecution if (1) she fears persecution in the country of nationality on account of race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion, (2) there is a reasonable possibility of suffering such persecution if she were to return to that country, and (3) she is unable or unwilling to return to, or avail herself of the protection of that country because of such fear. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(2)(i). To demonstrate a well-founded fear, the applicant need not prove that persecution is more likely than not; even a ten-percent chance of persecution is sufficient to establish that persecution is a reasonable possibility. Al-Harbi v. INS, 242 F.3d 882, 888 (9th Cir. 2001) (citing INS v. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. 421, 440 (1987)).

i. Subjectively Genuine and Objectively Reasonable Fear

A well-founded fear of future persecution must be both subjectively genuine and objectively reasonable. Ahmed, 504 F.3d at 1191. The subjective test is satisfied by credible testimony that the applicant genuinely fears persecution on account of a statutorily protected ground that is perpetrated by the government or by forces the government is unable or unwilling to control. Rusak v. Holder, 734 F.3d 894, 896 (9th Cir. 2013). The objective component requires “credible, direct, and specific evidence” that the applicant risks persecution in her home country. Id.

In the instant case, Respondent credibly testified that she fears her ex-partner, Mr. H , will locate her and physically harm or kill her in Mexico. A respondent’s credible testimony of fear of harm satisfies the subjective prong for a well-founded fear of persecution. See id. Accordingly, the Court finds that Respondent established that her fear is subjectively genuine. See id.

Next, the Court considers whether Respondent established through “credible, direct, and specific evidence” that her fear of returning to Mexico is objectively reasonable. See id. First, Respondent testified at length regarding the atrocious abuse she endured from 1998 until 2016 during her relationship with Mr. H in the United States. Over the course of their relationship, he consistently beat, raped, strangled, and psychologically abused her. Respondent testified that Mr. H raped her approximately five times per month and beat her approximately three times per month. The record also includes photographic evidence of the injuries Respondent sustained from the abuse by Mr. H . Exh. 5 at 29–38.

In addition, Ms. R stated in her declaration that Mr. H contacted her and her siblings seeking information regarding Respondent’s location and stated that he was in Chiapas, Mexico. Exh. 5 at 24; see also Exh. 5 at 39 (text messages from Mr. H seeking Respondent’s address in Mexico). Furthermore, the record reflects that Mr. H will have the ability, if he is not already present in Mexico, to enter Mexico and find and harm Respondent. Mr. H , as the father of three Mexican citizen children, could self-petition for permanent residency in Mexico, placing him in a position to have access to finding and harming Respondent. See Exh. 7 at Tab B–C. Additionally, Mr. H repeatedly beat and raped Respondent when she resisted reconciling with him or attempted to leave him in the past. Therefore, because Mr. H has expressed that he will attempt to find Respondent, it is likely that if Respondent again resists Mr. H she is at a high risk of harm by him. Considering the totality of the circumstances, the Court finds that Respondent’s fear of future harm by Mr. H is objectively reasonable, and she faces a chance greater than ten percent of persecution occurring upon her return to Mexico. Al-Harbi, 242 F.3d at 888.

iii. On Account of a Protected Ground

Respondent asserts that she will suffer persecution by Mr. H on account of her membership in the particular social group "Mexican females" and on account of her feminist political opinion. As discussed supra, the Court finds Respondent's proposed social group of "Mexican females" to be cognizable and that Respondent is a member of the group. In addition, the Court finds that Respondent holds a feminist political opinion, as discussed supra. Accordingly, the Court considers whether either protected ground would be one central reason for the persecution she would face in Mexico. INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i).

The Court finds that Respondent's membership in the particular social group "Mexican females" would be at least "one central reason" for her future persecution. Id. Respondent has an objectively reasonable fear of persecution by Mr. H, particularly due to the abuse she suffered in the past. For example, on one occasion when Respondent rejected his sexual advances, Mr. H stated that Respondent was "his woman and had to have sex with him whenever he wanted," and thereafter raped Respondent. Exh. 5 at 8. On other occasions, Mr. H stated that Respondent needed to have sex with him whenever he wanted because she was a woman and thus, "his slave." Id. at 15. Mr. H also frequently bit Respondent, leaving marks on her neck and arms to show that she was "[his] woman" because others "need[ed] to know it." Id. at 9. These statements establish that Mr. H frequently harmed Respondent in the past because she was a woman, and the Court finds that her membership in her particular social group "Mexican females" would be at least one central reason for her future persecution. See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i).

The Court also finds that Respondent's feminist political opinion would be one central reason for her future persecution, particularly because of her past experiences, which form the basis of her objectively reasonable fear of persecution. Id. Respondent testified that Mr. H frequently beat and raped her when she resisted his domination of her as the male head of the household. See Exh. 5 at 9-10. On one occasion, Mr. H beat Respondent so badly that she had a vaginal hemorrhage because she entered their home and told Mr. H that his friends should leave; he warned Respondent that she was not permitted to speak when entering the room. He also beat Respondent when she expressed her own opinions, justifying the abuse by stating that she was not allowed to have her own opinions or a say. Mr. H also exerted his dominance and control over Respondent by demanding she only work with other women and dress as he desired. If she resisted due to her belief that they were equal partners, Mr. H harmed her. Because Respondent's feminist opinion was a focus of Mr. H's abuse in the past, the Court finds that her feminist political opinion would be one central reason for her future persecution. See INA § 208(b)(1)(B)(i).

Therefore, the Court finds Respondent would face future persecution on account of both her membership in the particular social group "Mexican females" and her feminist political opinion. See id.

iv. Government Unable or Unwilling to Control

Respondent must also establish that the persecution she would suffer will be inflicted by forces the government is unable or unwilling to control. See Navas, 217 F.3d at 655-56. The Court finds for the same reasons articulated in Section III.B.1.c. supra, the Mexican government would be unable or unwilling to control Mr. H. In addition, the Court notes that Respondent testified that if Mr. H. found her in Mexico and persecuted her, she would try to report it to the police, but she believed it would be futile. She believed the lack of police protection would result in impunity for Mr. H., giving him more power to abuse her in any manner he desired. Accordingly, the Court finds that Respondent met her burden to establish that the persecution she would suffer would be inflicted by actors the government is unable or unwilling to control. See Navas, 217 F.3d at 655-56.

v. Internal Relocation

If the applicant failed to demonstrate past persecution, to establish a well-founded fear of persecution, it is the applicant's burden to show that she could not avoid persecution by relocating to another part of the country and it would not be reasonable to expect her to do so. See A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 344-45; 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(2)(ii).

Here, Respondent established that she could not avoid persecution by relocating to another part of the country. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.13(b)(2)(ii). Respondent testified that although she believed Mr. H. was removed to his native Guatemala, she believes he is presently in Mexico because his entire family resides in Mexico. Further, Ms. R. stated in her declaration that she spoke with Mr. H. and he stated in was in Chiapas and persists in seeking information regarding Respondent from her. Exh. 5 at 24.

In addition, Respondent stated that approximately one week after she was removed to Mexico, Mr. H. called her on her cell phone and told Respondent he was going to find her. During a second phone call, Mr. H. stated that he already confirmed that Respondent was residing at her parents' home in Mexico, and he would be "coming for [Respondent]." Despite Respondent's repeated pleas to Mr. H. to leave her alone, he continued to attempt to acquire information about Respondent's whereabouts through their children. Respondent fled to the United States after she continued to receive menacing phone calls from Mr. H. Respondent believes Mr. H. would be able to locate her anywhere in Mexico through their children or through their children's school documentation. See also Exh. 5 at 194-96 (abusers continue to have a right to obtain information about their children, making it relatively easy for an abuser to locate a woman fleeing his abuse). Indeed, their son stated in his declaration that Mr. H. contacted him seeking information regarding Respondent's location. Id. at 21. In addition, as previously noted, Respondent's entire family lives on the same piece of land as her parents' home. Further, country conditions evidence evinces that violence against women is a nationwide problem. See generally Exhs. 5, 9.

Because Respondent has established that she is likely to face danger throughout Mexico on account of her membership in a particular social group or political opinion, the Court finds that she has met her burden of establishing that she cannot internally relocate to avoid persecution and it would not be reasonable for her to do so. Therefore, the Court finds that Respondent established that she has a well-founded fear of persecution and is statutorily eligible for asylum. See INA §§ 101(a)(42)(A), 208(b)(2)(B).

3. Discretion

"Asylum is a discretionary form of relief from removal, and an applicant bears the burden of proving not only statutory eligibility for asylum but that she also merits asylum as a matter of discretion." A-B-, 27 I&N Dec. at 345 n.12; see also INA § 240(c)(4)(A)(ii). This determination requires a weighing of both the positive and negative factors presented in Respondent's case. Kalubi v. Ashcroft, 364 F.3d 1134, 1139-40 (9th Cir. 2004); Matter of Pula, 19 I&N Dec. 467, 473-74 (BIA 1987) (superseded in part by regulation on other grounds as stated in Andriasian v. INS, 180 F.3d 1033, 1043-44, n.17 (9th Cir. 1999)). To determine whether an asylum applicant merits relief in the exercise of the Court's discretion, the Court must consider the totality of the circumstances including the severity of the past persecution suffered and the likelihood of future persecution. Gulla v. Gonzales, 498 F.3d 911, 916 (9th Cir. 2007); Kalubi, 364 F.3d at 1138. "[D]iscretionary factors should be carefully evaluated in light of the unusually harsh consequences which may befall an alien who has established a well-founded fear of persecution; the danger of persecution should generally outweigh all but the most egregious of adverse factors." Pula, 19 I&N Dec. at 474. Factors to consider include the applicant's age, health, and ties to the United States, among others. Id.

Here, Respondent has many positive equities. Respondent has lived in the United States for approximately 28 years. She is the primary wage earner for her family, has a consistent work history, and owns her own business. Respondent has three United States citizen children, two of whom live in the United States. She actively participates in her children's education. See Exh. 3. Furthermore, Respondent suffered severe past persecution and has a high likelihood of suffering severe persecution should she be removed to Mexico. Additionally, she continues to suffer from post-traumatic stress disorder and major depressive disorder due to the abuse and harm she experienced throughout her life. See Exh. 9 at Tab C. She testified that should she be granted asylum, she would like to continue working on her business and raising her children.

These positive equities must be weighed against Respondent's negative equities; namely, her criminal history. In 2007, Respondent was convicted of criminal impersonation and was sentenced to one year of probation. Exh. 7 at 6-25. Respondent testified that when she attempted to renew her Arizona identification, she was instructed to include a social security number and she wrote down a random number. Respondent was also convicted of shoplifting and sentenced to pay a fine in 2007. Id. at 3-4. Finally, in 2017, Respondent was convicted of illegal entry and sentenced to 150 days of confinement. Id. at 27-29. While the Court does not condone Respondent's actions, her convictions are for relatively minor and nonviolent crimes. Respondent did not display an intent to defraud anyone, and Respondent's conviction for illegal entry was committed in the context of her attempt to flee Mexico.

Therefore, after carefully reviewing the entire record and weighing the equities in this case, the Court finds that Respondent warrants a favorable exercise of discretion, and the Court grants Respondent asylum in the exercise of discretion. See A-B, 27 I&N Dec. at 345 n.12.

C. Alternative Finding: Withholding of Removal

Withholding of removal requires an applicant to establish that his life or freedom would be threatened in the country of removal because of her race, religion, nationality, membership in a particular social group, or political opinion. INA § 241(b)(3)(A); see Barajas-Romero, 846 F.3d at 360 (explaining that the nexus requirement for withholding of removal includes weaker motives than the “one central reason” asylum standard). An applicant may prove eligibility for withholding of removal either (1) by establishing a presumption of future persecution based on past persecution that DHS does not rebut, or (2) through an independent showing of a clear probability of future persecution. INS v. Stevic, 467 U.S. 407, 429–30 (1984); 8 C.F.R. §§ 1208.16(b)(1)–(2). The Supreme Court defined “clear probability of persecution” to mean that it is “more likely than not” the applicant would be subject to persecution on account of a protected ground if returned to the proposed country of removal. Cardoza-Fonseca, 480 U.S. at 429.

For the same reasons elucidated above, considering the entire record, the Court also finds Respondent is statutorily eligible for withholding of removal because it is more likely than not that her life or freedom would be threatened in the future in Mexico because of a protected ground. See INA § 241(b)(3)(A); 8 C.F.R. § 1208.16(b)(2). Accordingly, the Court grants Respondent withholding of removal in the alternative.

D. Alternative Finding: Protection Under the Convention Against Torture

Protection under the CAT is mandatory relief if the requirements are met. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.16(c). The applicant bears the burden of establishing that it is more likely than not she would be tortured by or at the instigation of, or with the consent or acquiescence of, a public official or other person acting in an official capacity if removed to Mexico. Id.; Zheng v. Asheroft, 332 F.3d 1186, 1194 (9th Cir. 2003). Torture is defined as any act by which severe pain or suffering, whether physical or mental, is intentionally inflicted on a person for purposes such as intimidation, coercion, punishment, or discrimination, by, at the instigation of, or with the consent or acquiescence of a public official or other person acting in an official capacity, including willful blindness. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.18(a)(1). The Ninth Circuit held that the applicant need only show “awareness” and “willful blindness” on the part of government officials. Zheng, 332 F.3d at 1197. Under the Ninth Circuit’s interpretation, “[i]t is enough that public officials could have inferred the alleged torture was taking place, remained willfully blind to it, or simply stood by because of their inability or unwillingness to oppose it.” Ornelas-Chavez v. González, 458 F.3d 1052, 1060 (9th Cir. 2006).

The Court must consider all evidence relevant to the likelihood of future torture, including, but not limited to: past torture inflicted upon the applicant; evidence that she could relocate to another part of Mexico where it is unlikely she will be tortured; gross, flagrant, or mass violations of human rights; and other relevant information regarding conditions in Mexico.

See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.16(c)(3).

Respondent believes Mr. B. or Mr. H. will rape or kill her if she returns to Mexico. The evidence in the record corroborates Respondent's fear of torture. First, Respondent credibly testified that she experienced torture in the past by both men. See Edu v. Holder, 624 F.3d 1137, 1145 (9th Cir. 2010) (quoting Nuru v. Gonzales, 404 F.3d 1207, 1218 (9th Cir. 2005) (the existence of past torture "is ordinarily the principal factor on which [the court must] rely")). Mr. B. beat her numerous times, and he burned her with a cigarette on two occasions. In addition, Mr. H. repeatedly raped and beat Respondent. The Court is satisfied that both Mr. B. and Mr. H. intentionally inflicted severe pain and suffering upon Respondent that rises to the level of torture. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.18(a)(1).

Moreover, Respondent continues to suffer the effects of the torture today. See Mohammed v. Gonzales, 400 F.3d 785, 802 (9th Cir. 2005) (stating that evidence of past torture that causes "permanent and continuing harm" may be sufficient to establish eligibility for CAT relief). Respondent suffers from post-traumatic stress disorder and major depressive disorder due to the abuse and harm she experienced throughout her life. See Exh. 9 at Tab C. She continues to think about the abuse she experienced every day and suffers from frequent nightmares of her former partners trying to kill her. Id.

Additionally, Mexican females continue to have limited, if any, means to escape violence, particularly in family relationships. Exh. 5 at 181. Mexico continues to display "deep and persistent insensitivity to gender issues," causing widespread gender-based violence throughout society, as well as in domestic relationships. Id. The Court previously found that Respondent could not relocate to avoid harm from either Mr. B. or Mr. H. If women attempt to move elsewhere in the country, they are unprotected and there are no guarantees for their safety. Id. Based on the combination of all of the above factors, the Court finds that Respondent would not be able to safely relocate in Mexico, contributing to the likelihood that she would more likely than not be tortured if returned to Mexico.

Respondent has also demonstrated that it is more likely than not that she will be tortured with the consent or acquiescence of the Mexican government. See 8 C.F.R. § 1208.18(a)(1). The country-conditions documentation indicates that the Mexican government has made attempts to curb violence against women; for example, it has enacted the gender alert systems intended to protect women. See Exh. 5 at 202. However, the record indicates that the government's actions have had no effect on the current situation in Mexico and laws protecting women are not enforced effectively. Id. The Mexican legal system is unresponsive and ineffective, and as discussed above, justice officials are unwilling or unable to protect women from gender-related harms in their homes and elsewhere, despite recent efforts to improve this problem. Id. at 181. This is reflected in the few prosecutions or convictions for femicides. Id. at 202.

Not only is the Mexican government ineffective in protecting women from sexual violence and torture, but the record contains evidence that the government is aware of and "willfully blind" to such treatment. The Mexican government admitted the country's difficult adjustment from its mentality that women are inferior. Id. at 187-88. As previously noted, police often do not seriously consider reports of abuse and commonly negotiate a reconciliation with abusers, placing the woman reporting the abuse at risk of future harm; police treat domestic violence, including incidents of torture by a partner, as the "normal state of affairs." See id. at 192, 258. This culture of violence against women, combined with high levels of impunity for gender-based violence, sufficiently demonstrate a pattern of acquiescence by government officials to the type of violence women like Respondent face. See id. at 251, 253.

Based on this evidence, the Court finds that Respondent has established that it is more likely than not that she will be tortured with the acquiescence of the Mexican government upon her return. 8 C.F.R. § 1208.16(c). Accordingly, the Court grants Respondent protection under CAT in the alternative.

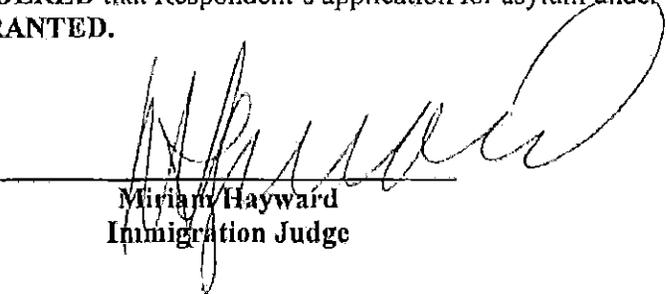

IV. CONCLUSION

The Court finds that Respondent suffered past persecution and has a well-founded fear of persecution on account of her membership in a particular social group and her political opinion. The Court also finds that the Mexican government is unable or unwilling to protect Respondent and that she cannot internally relocate within Mexico. Thus, she is statutorily eligible for asylum, and the Court grants her application in the exercise of its discretion. Finally, the Court finds that Respondent is statutorily eligible for withholding of removal under INA § 241(b)(3) and protection under CAT, and the Court would grant Respondent's applications for such relief in the alternative.

In light of the foregoing, the following order⁴ shall enter:

ORDER

IT IS HEREBY ORDERED that Respondent's application for asylum under INA § 208(a) be and hereby is GRANTED.
